Mariner Circling Mars

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — The United States rocketed its Mariner 9 spacecraft into orbit around Mars Saturday, beginning an unprecedented study of the Red Planet that could write a new chapter in the annals of space exploration.

Beats Russians

It apparently arrived at Mars ahead of two Russian space probes, Mars 2 and 3, which Western scientists speculate will attempt unmanned landings.

The spacecraft ended its 5½-month, quarter-billion mile journey at 4:14 p.m. PST when a 15-minute burn of the Mariner 9 retrothrust slowed an 11,000 mile-an-hour plunge so Martian gravity could swing it into orbit.

Thirteen minutes after its retrothrust — firing with the power of 10 automobile engines — shut down, the spacecraft passed behind Mars and out of communication with Earth.

Photos showed Mars filling the entire TV monitor, and scientists — watching could clearly see the south polar cap of frozen carbon dioxide through the haze.

'See Detail'

"I'm very pleased with this. I think it demonstrates the atmosphere is clear enough to see surface detail up close," said Dr. Bruce Murray of the California Institute of Technology. More pictures were scheduled today.

While behind the planet, Mariner 9 completed a critical cal manoeuvre in which solar panels supplying electricity moved back into view of the sun and battery operation of the spacecraft ended.

Mariner 9 resurfaced at 5:16 p.m. and ground controllers received first signals six minutes later — the time it takes radio waves to reach Earth from Mars.

Tracked with scientific instruments — two television cameras, an infrared radiometer and an ultraviolet and infrared spectrometer — Mariner 9 could give man the closest look he's ever had at another planet.

The spacecraft was designed for a basic 90-day mission but could send back data from its twice-daily orbit around Mars for up to a year.

The $15-million spacecraft wasn't designed to find life on Mars, if it exists, but is expected to pinpoint areas where conditions might favor life.

A thick haze continued to shroud Mars Saturday, and California Institute of Technology's Jet Propulsion Laboratory scientists here, who give directions to Mariner 9, fretted that the haze might obscure surface features and prevent television mapping of the crater-pocked surface.

Scientists believe that the yellowish haze is dust kicked perhaps 10 miles into the atmosphere by a storm that has raged over the planet since late September. It is the worst storm ever seen on Mars in 70 years of Earth-based observations.

Although all indications are the haze is composed of dust, many scientists have trouble visualizing winds in the rarefied Martian atmosphere that could churn up such a haze.

Plane Hijacker 'Bent On Self-Destruction'

Pilot Ehnman describes in-flight battle

Wild Man In Fight Says Pilot

CALGARY (CP) — An armed hijacker who brought an eight-hour reign of terror aboard an Air Canada DC-8 Friday night appeared "completely deranged and bent on self-destruction," the jet's pilot, Capt. Vern Ehnman of Montreal, said Saturday.

The saga, which began on Flight 812 east of Regina, ended early Saturday morning when a crew member claimed the handset with a fire axe.

The airplane was approaching Calgary at 3,000 feet, Ehnman said, when the hijacker asked for a knife to cut the twine on a package he claimed contained a parachute. He had threatened to blow up the plane with dynamite unless he was allowed to bail out.

The captain told a news conference that he offered the man a fire axe and when he put down his sawed-off, double-barrel shotgun to cut the twine, Ehnman realized that "might be the only chance I would get."

Pitched Gun

"I pitched the gun down the aisle as far as I could and grabbed his throat," Ehnman said. He said he shouted for help and Chief Purser John Arpin of Toronto jumped into the fight. The hijacker "fought like a wild man."

Assistant purser Philippe Bonny hit him on the head with the flat side of the axe, but the man managed to get an arm free and reached for a pocket crying "I'll blow you all up."

Police later removed an undetermined amount of explosives from the plane. The purser grabbed the hijacker's hand just before it reached some wires believed connected to the explosives and the assistant purser hit him again with the axe handle, the captain said.

No Charges

Paul Joseph Cini, 27, of Calgary was in a Calgary hospital with concussion and a two-inch gash to his head. No charges have been laid and the matter has been referred to the Alberta Attorney General.

Switch to Vienna

Hope Sprinkles SALT Talks

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Gerard Smith, the chief U.S. negotiator, arrived in Vienna Saturday night, expressing hope for success in the new round of negotiations with the Soviet Union in the strategic arms limitation talks (SALT).

"It is my hope that we may soon bring these negotiations to a successful conclusion," he said in a statement.

Asked how soon he expected an agreement, Smith said, "I don't want to speculate, but I hope we can produce something specific here before the end of the year."

President Nixon has said he expected "great progress" to be made by the end of the year.

But Nixon, in his news conference Friday, added that it was "highly improbable" that a final agreement would be reached by that time.

There has never been any official announcement on what SALT has achieved so far, except for agreements on replacing the "Hot Line" between Washington and Moscow by satellite systems.

Breaks a Must

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — The Oregon wages and hours commission has adopted a rule requiring two 15-minute paid rest periods for all full-time adult workers not covered by union contracts.

$50 a Day Ends Coal Strike

NEW YORK (AP) — Labor and management teams ratified a new contract early today to end a 31-day coal strike that killed 100,000 miners in 20 states.

The three-year pact called for boosting wages of skilled workers to an average $39 a day from $37 and doubling coal royalties. The industry put a $1.2 million or 39 per cent price tag on the wage and benefit package.

Union said men could be back on the job Monday.

Cambodians on Run

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP) — A Cambodian garrison was forced to abandon the rubber town of Ruuming on the northeastern front Saturday, leaving behind more than 400 wounded, the high command said.

The garrison quit the town, 82 miles northwest of the capital, after a 19-day North Vietnamese siege. They left in small groups, about 500 out of an original force of 1,000. Only about 30 have reached safety so far, the command reported.

The others may have been killed or captured.

The fall of Ruuming was a serious setback. It left the North Vietnamese in firm control of four miles of Highway 6. To the north about 20,000 Cambodian troops, who launched an offensive to clear the highway in October, must be supplied by air.

A high command spokesman, Capt. Chhang Sang, said about two battalions at the hamlet of Treai, near Ruuming, were able to save most of their men by striking out to the north. They blew up their ammunition in Treai.

The North Vietnamese 9th Division struck in a counteroffensive Oct. 26, aiming their main blow at Ruuming. At that time, Cambodian forces in the road clearing operation were struggling along Highway 6 and were vulnerable to attack.

In addition to Highway 6, North Vietnamese troops have cut Highway 2, 3, 4 and 5, leaving only Highway 1 to Saigon open to normal traffic.

North Vietnamese forces were active around Phnom Penh. Officials were forced to cut all commercial telecommunications with the outside world because of fighting near the Kamboj transmitting station, 10 miles southwest of Phnom Penh near Highway 4.

News correspondents sent out dispatches on commercial airlines.

A spokesman said another battle erupted late Saturday near the sugar refinery of Boeung Tean, 15 miles southwest of Phnom Penh on Highway 4.

These are the people for whom Christmas, 1971, would seem to have little to offer. Their numbers are even greater this year because of an uncertain economy.

People talk of the good life and big wages, but other people talk of the unhealthy employment picture and U.S. economic measures that pose a threat. Most of all, they talk

Briefcase Empties Jetliner

SEATTLE (AP) — A Torgotten briefcase aboard a Northwest Orient Airlines 747 jetliner led crew members to believe a bomb might be aboard the Tokyo to Seattle flight Saturday and resulted in the evacuation of 180 passengers, an airline spokesman said.

The plane landed at Seattle-Tacoma International Airport its scheduled destination, and taxied to a hangar far from the terminal, Erickson said.

Then he said, the passengers were evacuated and the briefcase examined. No bomb was found, Erickson said. The briefcase apparently belongs to a passenger who had flown from Seattle to Tokyo and left it aboard.

Bad Weather Delays Hunt

PRINCE GEORGE, B.C. (CP) — Poor weather Saturday continued to hamper the search for a light plane with five persons aboard, missing for the last 10 days northeast of Finlay Forks, about 150 miles north of Prince George.

Aboard the plane when it disappeared were the pilot, Bruce McPherson of Prince George, Arnold Pollock of Prince George, Cecil Schroeder of Victoria, Gordon Heimer of Hazelton and Gordon Pruden of Yellow River.

Amid Affluence There's Still Want

What Does Christmas Mean?

By DON COLLINS

Column Reporter

The kid wants to know what Christmas really is.

He knows all about the history of the day, what it stands for. But he wonders what it really means in today's hectic world.

His father groans for an answer. He finds it easier to tell him what Christmas should be, but sometimes isn't.

It should, of course, be a time of much happiness. Which it is. It should not be a day of despair born from want and lack of concern. But it is that, too.

The bad side of the Christmas story can be found all too easily in such pockets of affluence as Greater Victoria.

It is not something confined to less fortunate areas of the world.

This year, as usual, the vast majority of people in Greater Victoria will step from a tangle of discarded gift wrappings to tables overladen with the rich foods that befit the occasion.

They will be comfortable and secure within their family circles.

This is Christmas as the kid knows it. It is that way, too, for his friends. But what about the others — the ones his father has mentioned?

So his father tells him about a few. Like Joe who has a wife and four kids and no job. Or Sarah and her five kids, deserted by the husband and father of the family. Or the guy down the block who can't work because he is sick. Emotionally sick. But sick just the same.

Gordie Hunter Still a Choice

A FEW WEEKS back I made a resolution to keep my typewriter away from the Reid Centre controversy. I had resigned the Reid Centre was, to all intents and purposes, dead and therefore there was no necessity to keep flogging the carcass.

Leave me break the resolution, throw it in the wastebasket. I do so because of the performance of Sandy Reid at a Chamber of Commerce breakfast this past week at The Empress.

J. A. (Sandy) Reid, big-time developer, obviously a success in his chosen field. But off his Chamber of Commerce speech, Sandy Reid is not above a bit of muscle, a smidgen of threat.

He reportedly said that if Victoria city council does not approve plans for the Reid Centre, a seven-story building could be constructed on the property below Basson Square.

"WE'VE BEEN urged by some to teach Victoria a lesson," he continued. "We have the right to build a ghastly-looking concrete box on the property."

This is the type of operator Victoria city council would do business with? This is the man we would entrust our waterfront to? His effrontery is monumental and galling. He is, in effect, telling the citizens of the Victoria area to shape up or take his consequences.

Sort of the big city wheel telling us colonists what dire straits he'll leave us in.

REID HAS SAID his project could tie in with the concepts of the recently published Old Town report — an intermingling of new construction and restoration of the old. The two plans he has presented — the three-tower and the two-tower ideas — would in no way complement the aesthetics of the restored old buildings. Like lumping a Jackson Pollock with an Andrew Wyeth.

And incidentally, Reid has not sent any such feasibility study to the city planning department.

At this same chamber luncheon, real estate salesman Glen McGregor got to his feet and made a statement.

"I FEEL the news media now have a responsibility. I feel that all other alternatives to the Reid Centre have been that much weaker."

YOUR GOOD HEALTH

Clotting Problem

By G. C. THOMPSON, MD

Dear Dr. Thompson: I bruise and bleed very easily. I can barely touch myself with something and either seem to bleed underneath the skin, or if I break the skin I bleed a lot. I find myself bleeding or bruised when I haven't even realized that I hurt myself. Can you tell me what causes this, or what I can do for it? I am 51. Mrs. B. F.

Too-easy bruising quite often is attributable to lack of enough calcium or vitamin C, but when it happens to the extent you describe, I would suspect a problem involving the basic clotting mechanism of the blood.

I would, therefore, recommend that you have your doctor arrange for some very thorough testing of the quality of your blood. Proper treatment may stall off more serious difficulty later.

Dear Dr. Thompson: More than a year ago I had a ganglion removed from my wrist. The surgeon said there was probably a 50-per-cent chance of its coming back in a year or so. If it did, I've had it removed again by another surgeon who said there was a 75-per-cent chance of return.

and I should not have the operation again unless it was very necessary.

I would very much like to play tennis for another 30 years, but it seems this ganglion bit will interfere. Is there anything that can be done to prevent continuing growth? — G. B. F.

They told you the truth: there's a strong chance of a ganglion recurring. A ganglion is a cyst or herniation in a tendon sheath.

There is no way of preventing recurrence, but usually a ganglion is not large, and I'm not clear as to why you feel it would prevent tennis.

Words from the Wise

A NEW EMPHASIS on man's harsh treatment of the seas came from Geneva last month. A prediction by Jacques Piccard that the oceans have only 25 to 30 years to live unless the world can halt the progressive pollution taking place cannot be treated lightly. The renowned Swiss oceanographer was not only speaking from his own knowledge but from studies by other under-water experts.

As a consultant to the secretariat of the United Nations conference on the human environment to be held next year in Stockholm, Professor Piccard added to the warning in an interview a few days ago at Ottawa where, by coincidence, an international meeting was being held to prepare a report on marine pollution for the conference in Sweden. He said, during a stop-over en route to Hawaii, the world must go on an austerity program if it is to survive pollution. It is necessary to change "the society of consumption" into a society in which people are willing to sacrifice such things as weekend use of their automobiles.

In his earlier statement in Switzerland he said that somewhere between five and 10 million tons of petroleum products were going into the oceans each year; an estimated 1,800,000 tons of this, including 200,000 tons of lead, came from vehicle exhaust emissions into the atmosphere being deposited subsequently on the seas; tanker dumping was responsible for another million tons and the remainder came from petroleum products discharged into rivers.

He identified an estimated 3,000 tons of mercury going into the oceans each year from paper mills effluent as another major part of the danger of marine life kill.

This multiple pollution, said Professor Piccard — and he included insecticides with the oil, lead and mercury deposits — is poisoning surface layers of plankton which will lead to the withering of larger plankton and the eventual death of all fish for lack of food.

His warning words are simple enough to be understood by everyone. And they have brought quick response from many parts. But the sad thing is that some statements of intent in correcting the condition don't add up.

Canada's official position, as stated the other day at the time Professor Piccard was passing through, was to the effect that the use of the marine environment for waste disposal of any type is an undesirable practice if it causes or may cause damage to the marine environment. This was given in objections to a United States plan for regulating ocean dumping of chemicals and other toxic substances through a system of permits which Canada said was "overly limited in its objective."

But only a short time prior to this statement on November 3 — Environment Minister Jack Davis tabled in the Commons new pulp and paper mill regulations to reduce water pollution which, without doubt, are limited. They require new mills to reduce effluents to the highest degree possible under existing technology. And long-established plants are allowed to carry on the poisoning process, although they will be required eventually to cut back their dumping under "schedules of compliance" to be negotiated between themselves and the government.

This is not far out of line with the United States' proposal.

At the same time, the environment minister made a funny with his "get tough" statement about "going it alone" as a marine policeman on the high seas if deliberate bilge pumping and accidental spillage of oil continues off our shores.

"We, the coastal states, don't have any alternative as long as there is a vacuum at the international level," Mr. Davis made bold.

There can be no quarrel with the need for international handling of the problem. This is the only way it can be met. It is a joke, though, to suggest that Canada can and will do something on its own as far as other nations are concerned. With what?

A Task for the Church

THE STEADILY MOUNTING FEROCITY of the Irish Republican Army's war of terror would seem to doom any hope of re-establishment of law and order without recourse to the harshest reprisals. The tarring and feathering, and head cropping of women who fraternize with British soldiers, and the murder of unarmed policemen are not likely to soften the determination of the authorities. What they might do instead is trigger the sort of retaliation which would mean civil war.

But terror can defeat itself. The latest atrocities reported from the afflicted northern counties must outrage the very people on whose behalf they have allegedly been perpetrated.

The tarring and feathering attempt by one group of masked women was frustrated by men of the IRA, itself responsible for similar "punishments," as they are described. So it seems that at least some of the leaders recognize such brutalities are as likely as not to be more injurious than helpful to their cause. They certainly bring nearer to breaking point the patience of Protestants who thus far have been restrained. That is a development that only the most radical extremist would care to risk.

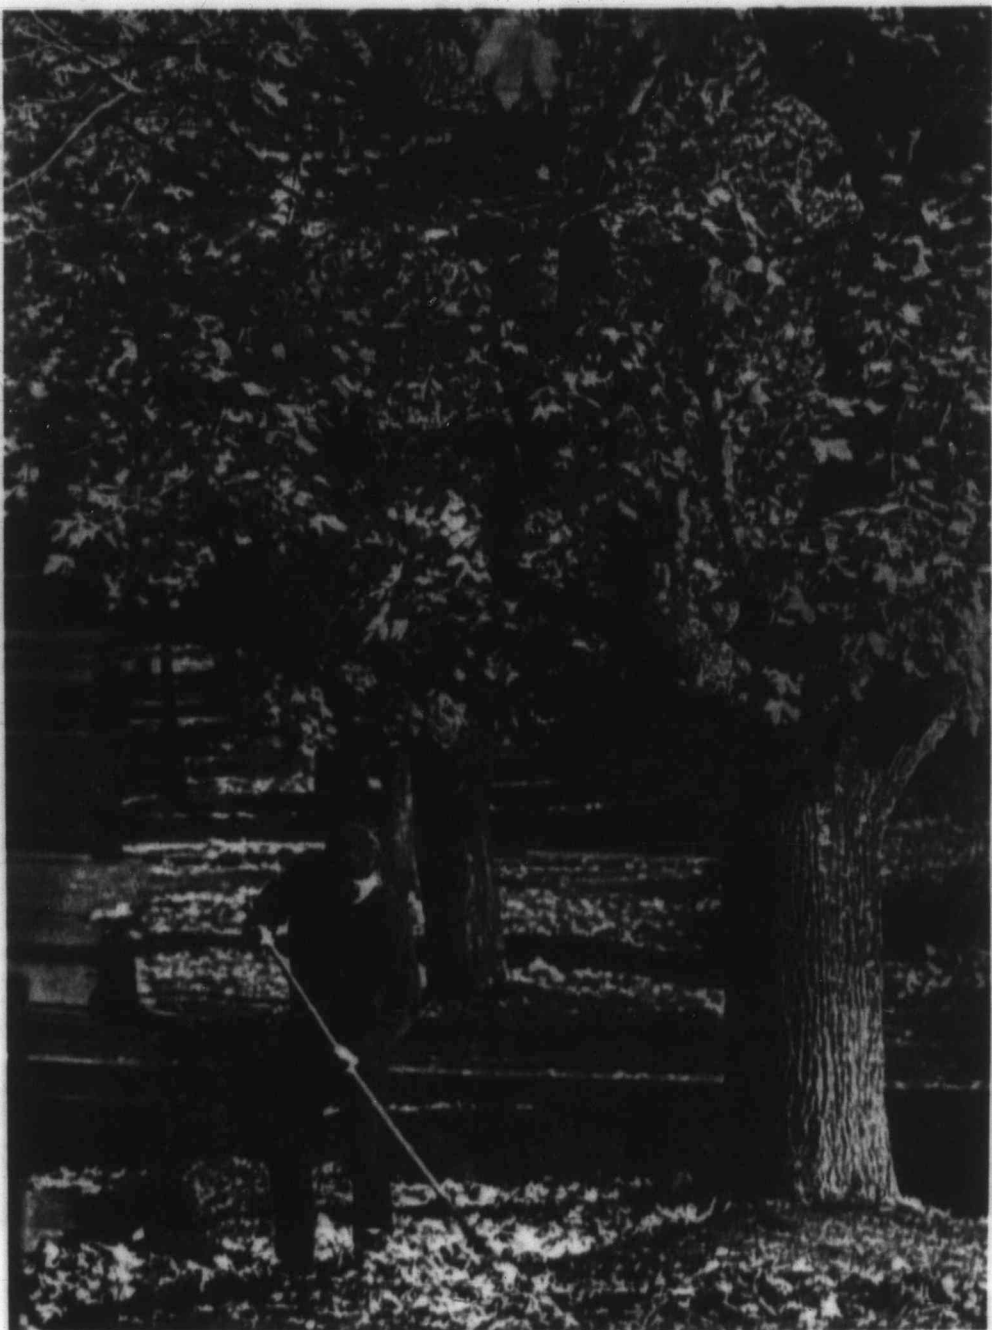

The Sunday Times (London) says "the problem remains the Roman Catholic minority's support of terrorism. Some of that support proceeds from intimidation but if the authorities suppose that new military action — even successful action — will then free Catholics to co-operate with the established order, they have read recent history optimistically."

That may be true. Nevertheless, it is permissible to hope that the new atrocities will move the Roman Catholic Church to the intervention it has seemed anxious to avoid. There is little doubt that its influence would be of help — and even decisive.

The Northern Ireland government appears to have appreciated the possibility by the appointment of a Roman Catholic to the cabinet. Dr. Neave has said he would like to act as a bridge between Catholic and Protestant — for it is recognized that from their disagreement the root of the whole trouble takes nourishment. It is the first time in half a century that a Catholic has held cabinet rank in Ulster.

The Sunday Telegraph (London) fears there is not "a firm enough foundation" for such a bridge among the Catholic minority. But with a little encouragement from the church that situation could be altered. What is needed is a simple directive.

The Fall-en

Ireland Revisited

TO return to Belfast after a mere five weeks' absence is to realize at a blow just how fast and how grimly the Northern Ireland situation is deteriorating.

First there are the physical changes. Familiar landmarks such as shops and houses have gone. The bombers and the barbers have had their cumulative effect on large areas of the city.

Sites are cleared quickly and cleanly, and yesterday's bomb blast headline becomes today's vacant plot. The Catholic Lower Falls Road — notorious as a centre for the illegal Irish Republican Army — most now be one of the most devastated areas in Europe. Five more buildings were destroyed there in one night recently.

Scrap metal merchants with picturesque horses and carts pick their way through the derelict buildings and the burned-out trucks. The buildings that still stand are scarred with bullet holes and shrapnel. Most of the tiny shops are barricaded and deserted.

Of equal impact is the change to the police stations, and army posts, now under constant threat not just from stone and gasoline-bomb throwing mobs but also from attack by the gunmen and the guerrillas. Bombers' outside each, large ramps have been placed in the road to skies down passing cars.

Traffic must ease itself across at walking pace, while soldiers stare down their guns. By night the changes in the city's face are just as marked. Many streets in troubled areas are without light. It is too dangerous for the electricity authority to come to repair the lamps, and even if they did the bulbs would soon be shot out again.

In contrast to these blackened roads is the blaze of light around each army post where hand-controlled searchlights follow the cars as they crawl by.

Heavily as you drive past and you can see the soldiers stiffen under the glare of the lights.

The only activity on the pavements of these ghettos, districts comes from the hopeful knots of hitch-hikers trying to make their way home. Buses do not run after early evening — too many have been burned.

The Changed Face

in recent weeks to allow services after dark. The hibernians do not find many takers.

Explosions, even quite minor ones, echo around the city. Everyone has become an amateur expert in guessing where the blast has gone off, and what size it was. Locals are impressively accurate. In many parts of the city the sound of gunfire also will occasionally punctuate a conversation.

This deterioration in the security situation is reflected by the army press office. Incidents that would have been ranked as major ones a few weeks ago have become "Nothing much, old boy. Just a couple of our foot patrols have come under gunfire in the past hour."

Off the streets the change in Belfast life is equally apparent. The city's main hotel, the New Europa, has had a barricade thrown around it. Guests have their bags searched as they enter, and are sometimes frisked. After the planting of two large bombs in the foyer and bar, there are no more than a few guests in the hotel.

Another hotel with 118 beds has an average of eight visits each night — and that after its main rival across the street closed through lack of business a few weeks ago.

Ordinary people are markedly more nervous. In the IRA-controlled areas they will

There seem to be few, if any, moderates left in Northern Ireland, and an outsider is wise to tailor his comments to suit his companion. Argument in the present climate can have no success.

Meanwhile the rate of the killings accelerates, averaging nearly two people a day now. It will take only one particularly serious bomb attack on something like a bar and the killing of an unusually large number of people to change the whole scale of the struggle, and perhaps launch the much talked-about civil war between the Protestant and the Republican Catholics.

It is a bland Belfast man who dismisses that possibility out of hand today.

Bankruptcy—or Devastation

By MARQUEE CHILDS

It is surely not unreasonable to ask where this race will end. The Communists last was to be the proof test, the final development test, of the warhead for the Spartan missile of the Safeguard anti-ballistic missile. The Soviet Union, the conjecture was, were doing just the same thing.

But if Foster's wizards are working up new and more fantastic nuclear weapons, the Safeguard may already be as outmoded as the muzzle-loading rifle. Many scientific witnesses, when the anti-ballistic controversy was at its height two years ago, testified that it was not hopelessly out of date and wouldn't keep out incoming missile shots. Many of these witnesses had themselves been part of the inner circle of weapons developers.

So we come to the strategic arms limitation talks (SALT), with the breath of hope out of Helsinki that agreement would come before the end of the year on limiting defensive missiles, with the Soviets agreeing to approximately 100 around Moscow and conceding up to 50 to the United States to protect the intercontinental missile firing bases in the West. More recently doubts have been cast on this rather fragile hope. The word is no agreement until next year.

What this overlooks is the economic consequences of the race. In a totalitarian society the consumer can be squeezed down to a minimum existence. Take one item alone, the motorcar. If the Soviets produce this year 100,000 passenger cars it will be a record. The United States is aiming for a 10,000,000-car year. All the rhetoric about a rich country being able to afford both guns and butter does not conceal the ravages of inflation and the pinch of poverty.

What You'd Call The Capitalist Look?

By RICHARD JACKSON
Colonist Ottawa Bureau

AFTER two weeks' roughly one each of seeing, chewing Soviet Premier Alexei Kosygin and Yugoslav President Josip Tito, one impression registers indelibly on the mind.

It hits you, right between the eyes, that the gentlemen in question may be card-carrying, practising, hard-line Communists, but they sure go for the sweets of capitalism.

They take the very best that the free enterprise system they hold in such contempt can offer, as if they were born to the purple of the super-rich.

None of that man-of-the-people stuff of dressing up like Castro, Mao, Lin Biao, and some of the survivors of the Stalin era in humble, uniform-styled jackets, looking as if they were all set to cut cane, lay bricks, or man an assembly line.

No sireenish, none of that working-stiff jazz for Kosygin or Tito.

Instead they look and act like chairmen of the Board of Supercorporation.

And a new twist really a revival of an old one from the Middle Ages, or earlier in the days of the Caesars or even the Pharaohs—food-tasters in the retinue of the new Communist royalty.

Only they're not called that. Too crass for class.

Instead, the food-tasters are known as "inspectors."

On the insistence of each of the two communist states—

Call them food-tasters, as the kitchen staffs at state and government dinners did, or call them "inspectors," as they were officially titled, their business was testing the food and sipping the wine before any of it was served to Messrs. Kosygin and Tito.

Since the food was the finest and fanciest in the land, and the wines came from the deepest of ancient cellars, the food-tasting "inspectors" allowed, publicly in print, that they enjoyed their work.

Probably had to dry out and go on a diet after the orgy of gourmandizing.

Fleets of limousines, leased by the federal government for their comfort and pleasure, with thousands—yes, add them all up and they'd run into the thousands on several occasions—to safeguard them and perhaps remind them of home and state discipline.

But the gentlemen themselves, Alexei Kosygin and Josip Tito.

Very dapper.

In well-tailored double-breasted black, sometimes Edinburgh blue, suits of silk. Not too mod, nor too old school tie either.

White shirts. (Nice conservative touch, what? Must have seen in TAILOR AND CUTTER or WOMEN'S WEAR DAILY that "white is right" again and color's crude.)

Dark ties. Not too wide. Not too long.

Nice tans—After all, what's the good of a Black Sea and Adriatic coast if you don't get a touch of the old sun? Their tans stood out in fine contrast to the pale of late-summer Canadian faces.

Voices low, well modulated. Pleasant to the ear even if you couldn't understand the language. Firm, authoritative timbre, but not aggressive nor abrasive, instead rather reassuring.

Firm faces, too, with deeply etched lines easily breaking into smiles or concentrations of concern.

Eyes, Kosygin's icy blue, Tito's warm hazel-brown.

Both alert, watchful.

But with an agate-like reflection and toughness deep within, almost glazing over with a deadness when bored with the awkward formalities of state occasions, they withdrew into the thoughts of their private worlds.

One more thing. The aroma.

Picked up the scent when up close to each of them as they toured, in small, tightly restricted parties, the Commons and the Senate and the chambers of the two Speakers of the House.

It was the rich aroma—even in the morning—of good whiskey and fine cigars.

You can't mistake it. It's the heady smell of success, power and good rich living.

The gentlemen from behind the Iron Curtain happen to be chairmen of their boards—super-boards—and look, act, and even smell like it.

"Why shouldn't we be fed up? We've been around here longer than you."

THE $200 million that the blast at Amchitka cost in a drop in a large bucket. With nuclear weapons already being capable of mass death and destruction on a scale almost impossible to take in the pursuit of ever more fantastic and wholesale killing devices goes on.

On both sides of the great divide the pursuit seems to have no end, unless it be bankruptcy—or total devastation. The demonstrators in Canada against Amchitka forget or ignore that the Soviet Union has had two big underground bangs—one equal to if not exceeding Amchitka, the other somewhat smaller.

In a closed society these things are handled rather differently. Protesters, if any, are lashed off to prison or a lunatic asylum. The fact that no public announcement is made precludes any controversy even if it could occur in any, the highest ranks of science and administration.

By night the changes in the city's face are just as marked. Many streets in troubled areas are without light. It is too dangerous for the electricity authority to come to repair the lamps, and even if they did the bulbs would soon be shot out again.

In contrast to these blackened roads is the blaze of light around each army post where hand-controlled searchlights follow the cars as they crawl by.

Heavily as you drive past and you can see the soldiers stiffen under the glare of the lights.

The only activity on the pavements of these ghettos, districts comes from the hopeful knots of hitch-hikers trying to make their way home. Buses do not run after early evening — too many have been burned.

Traffic must ease itself across at walking pace, while soldiers stare down their guns. By night the changes in the city's face are just as marked. Many streets in troubled areas are without light. Geographer Ron Greeley checks oil of mini-bus before starting another stage of world journey.

By CHRIS ANDREWS
From London

Killian O'Donovan, a young Irish-Catholic philosopher, was in Peru a few weeks ago and he met up with a "very nice" Frenchwoman who had been living there for 20 years.

The only reason she remains in Peru is her love for butterfly collecting. O'Donovan was quick to admit too that she had the finest collection he had ever seen—all colors and shades and all sizes.

But the Frenchwoman had a complaint. Every year she wanders off into the Peruvian jungle to catch her prize butterflies and every year the numbers diminish—some types never to be seen again.

O'Donovan has a theory about these vanishing butterflies. He thinks they are perhaps the victims of forms of pollution mankind has not come to grasp yet. He points out that it is only two years since mercury was discovered in the Great Lakes of Canada.

Adventurous Canadians Seek Answers

O'Donovan thinks that research today is concentrating too much on the obvious aspects of pollution being created by man. Not enough, he believes, is being done about the subtle side of pollution—what O'Donovan believes may even be an evolutionary process.

The philosopher belongs to a group of Canadian graduates who have taken it upon themselves to adventure around the world—conducting research into conservation and the environment in relation to national parks.

The other members, all from the University of Toronto, are geographer Ron Greeley, economist Dale Duquesne and civil engineer Joseph Grieco.

The group call themselves the Canadian Global Expedition. They are touring in a well-equipped mini-bus. It will do around 80,000 miles before journey's end.

Already the vehicle has done 22,000 miles on a really roundabout trip from Toronto to London. In West Germany, the group had the engine changed before going on to Britain and Ireland.

The expedition so far has been through the U.S. and into South America and the Caribbean. In seven months countries visited include Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Argentina, Uruguay, Brazil and Jamaica.

O'Donovan and his friends are visiting at least one national park in each country they pass through. Collecting, as O'Donovan puts it, boring statistical facts on natural life and the parks, so that the group can draw up a socio-economic report at the end of the expedition to present to the Department of Indian Affairs, which is responsible for Canada's national parks.

Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau and former prime minister Lester Pearson are among those who have given their blessing to the venture. Money has come from the Department of Indian Affairs and the group has also put $10,000 of its own into the expedition. Other donations have been made, and on the trip itself individuals and companies have helped.

Why has the group embarked on such a unique project? Because of the increasing need to preserve what natural habitat is left. Parks provide the obvious escape route for people in industrial societies, and with these societies increasing all the time, there is all the more need to protect the natural environment.

Park officials in Uruguay told O'Donovan of the smaller numbers of penguins migrating each year to their national parks. The influx, once in thousands, is now in hundreds. The penguins, it is believed, are being drowned in the oil-ridden ocean.

In Holland the problem is altogether different. The smog and soot from industrial Germany and France is destroying much of the plant life. Of the plants that existed 50 years ago, only seven per cent remain unchanged. The rest have altered in appearance or have been killed off by industrial pollution.

By Christmas O'Donovan and his colleagues hope to be crossing the Sahara desert. They will travel through East and Central Africa and on to South Africa. From there they cross the Indian Ocean to Australia and New Zealand. It will probably be late 1973 by the time they reach home.

Innovation Must Go On—but in a New Direction

By DENNIS GABOR

When homo sapiens appeared on the earth, more or less in his present shape, innovation began.

Early Man was equipped with the same sort of brain that later could write the Principia Philosophiae, Naturalis, and the Principia Mathematica, but the brain was almost empty.

First had to come the greatest of all inventions: language; then tools, weapons and a primitive social organization suitable for agriculture and the domestication of animals. Then, much later, came writing and what we now call history.

What is now called innovation still has an element of it of the instinct that drove primitive man to produce such wonderful inventions as the bow and arrow, or to devise such complicated social arrangements as totalitarianism.

Mechanical inventions and social innovations have remained indispensable but uneasy partners from prehistory to modern times.

They were devised by two different kinds of human minds, and both were supported for long periods by the third type of man, who cared neither for technology, nor for social progress, but only for power.

Regrettably, history records mostly the deeds and misdeeds of this third type of man.

We have now come to a point in the evolution of civilization when such history must have a stop.

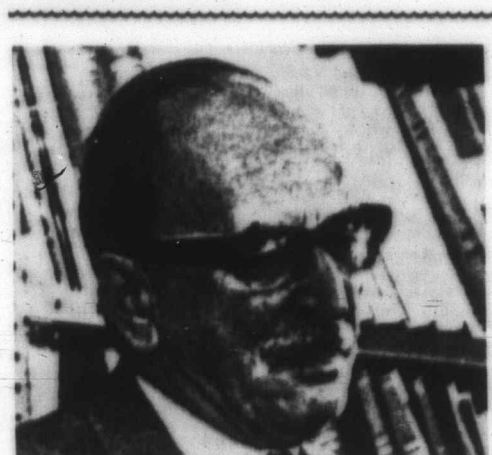

After a long and mostly tragic speech of darkness, some 30 years ago the empirical technology of the craftsman was joined by the systematic knowledge of nature and the method of reasoning from facts, not from fancies, which we call science.

The confluence of techniques and theoretical science created applied science, which gradually became synonymous with modern technology.

As we all know, this has now reached a stage at which it can destroy all civilization, at least temporarily, or create a new and happier world—if only man is fit for such a world.

The prospects for post-his-

Dr. Dennis Gabor was the winner of the 1927 Nobel Prize in physics. This article is excerpted from his recently-published book, Innovations: Scientific, Technological and Social.

toric man are dim. When looking into the far future, one is torn by doubt whether, can ever settle down to be happy.

One doubts also whether such a state, in which most of our instinctive and historic values are negated and in the end even human intelligence becomes unnecessary, is worth achieving.

Many of our greatest minds, such as Albert Einstein, have come to the conclusion that homo sapiens is approaching his end.

But the instinct that has brought us from the naked ape in the forest to modern man tells us that we must not give up.

Man has fought nature and his own kind for perhaps 100,000 years; now he will have to fight his own nature.

Ultimately this must be the aim of any farsighted innovator of our times and in the years to come.

At the present there is a terrifying imbalance in innovations. After many centuries in which innovation was almost imperceptible, and after a few in which technical progress was identified with human progress, we have now reached a stage in the world becomes intolerably overcrowded. They will also almost certainly provide us with powerful methods of mind control which can be used for good or evil.

Shall we be able to control the controllers? There is no simple answer to this. The time of simple solutions is long behind us, though we are still suffering from the simplistic slogans of the 19th century, such as "Free Enterprise," or "Common Ownership of the Means of Production."

We have long ago entered the era of compromises, of the piecemeal reconciliation of human nature and of vested interests with desirable aims, national and international.

Unfortunately, the struggle with these contrary forces has recently visibly shortened the "lead times," and we can see the governments planning for months ahead, rather than for 10 to 20 or more years.

History must stop, the insane quantitative growth must stop, but innovation must not stop—it must take an entirely new direction.

Instead of working blindly toward things bigger and better, it must work toward improving the quality of life rather than increasing its quantity. Innovation must work toward a new harmony, a new equilibrium; otherwise it will only lead to an explosion.

Man's landing on the moon is the epitome of this development; a splendid triumph of applied science and of a brilliant co-operative organization, at a time when most thinking Americans are filled with grave doubts about the sanity of their society.

The time of inventions in the ordinary sense is not yet over. The scientific-technological complex that we have created will produce more, almost automatically, by its own inertia, which is very different from conservation.

It is inertia according to Newton's (really Galileo's) first law: "A body remains in uniform motion unless acted upon by an external force."

We can with certainty expect from it cheaper and more abundant power, an even closer communications network, and revolutionary improvements in information processing.

But novelties far more important in their human and social implications can be expected from the biological sciences, which as yet have much smaller establishments.

They have already upset our world equilibrium by death control; now they can upset it even further by creating enough food for many more billions of people, until

Witches Return To Their Craft

By COLIN WILSON

Author of The Outsider, and The Occult

The other day I met an author who had written a piece on modern witchcraft. When I congratulated him on the article, he made a face. "Don't. That witch I put a spell on me, and it's only just worn off."

He had made some mildly skeptical remarks about the love potions she sold; whereupon she wrote him a letter, warning him that she had put a spell on him. His girlfriend confirmed the story. "He had terrible luck for months—dreadful things kept happening to him."

I do not doubt the story; nevertheless, it proves nothing about D's abilities as a witch. A large number of people possess the power to do harm by ill-wishing. Bernard Shaw firmly believed in it, writing in a letter of 1885: "All the people I ever hated died. A deadly but horrible emanation comes from the hater to his victim."

In 1925, he experienced this at first hand; when he was making a speech, urging the playwright Granville Barker to return to the theatre, Mrs. Granville Barker caused his spine to become "a bar of rusty iron" by glaring at his back with concentrated fury, during the month this lasted, the pain was so great that he was unable to lean forward.

Strindberg also possessed the "evil eye." And the novelist John Galsworthy became so accustomed to the horrible misfortunes that befell people he hated that he ended in a state of "neurotic benevolence."

For completeness, I should add that I suspect that I may have unconsciously caused the death of two people I detested. It was not deliberate; it was only when reading, Powsy, years later, that it struck me that my paroxysms of loathing had been followed by the illness and death of both of them.

The poet Robert Graves told me that one person in 20 possesses "occult powers"—telepathy, second sight, and so on—and that these are as "natural" as being double-jointed. That is to say, five per cent of people are natural witches. This has always been so. But it was not until the 13th century the church suddenly became alarmed about them, and the great witchcraft persecutions began.

It all started when the church decided to stamp out a sect of heretics called Cathars. The Cathars were basically early Puritans; they believed in chastity, poverty and vegetarianism. But they also believed that the Devil was an active reality, the Prince of this World, continually challenging God and trying to undo His work.

Pope Innocent III felt that this made the Devil the equal of God, and declared a crusade to stamp out the Cathars. Dominic who later became a saint—established his headquarters in Toulouse in southern France, and his Dominicans became a kind of secret police, rooting out heresy. Like all secret police, they got carried away by their own power, as Cathars became scarcer, they began hunting witches.

To begin with, it was a genuine confusion: the Cathars believed the Devil was as powerful as God; therefore they must worship the Devil. A century later, the Dominicans persuaded the paranoid Pope John XXII to give them a free hand against sorcery, and the massacres began.

For the next three centuries Europe was obsessed by the Devil. The harmless women who had always been allowed to brew their herbal medicines or tell fortunes from bowls of water were tortured and burned. And inevitably, this created the evil it was supposed to destroy.

The "witches" reacted by forming themselves into groups and calling on the Devil to destroy the torturers. The Witch's Sabbath, which had only existed in the imagination of the Dominicans, now became a reality.

Even so, most of the great witchcraft purges—in the Rhineland, in Poland, in Flanders and Hungary—were really no more than an excuse for religious persecution; Catholic princes—burned Protestant witches, and Protestant princes burned Catholic witches. The Inquisitor might descend on a village of 500 people, and have 150 burned alive; it was a more-or-less legal way of punishing rebellious peasants.

Later on—in the 17th century—witchcraft entered a distinctly sexual phase; sex-starved nuns became hysterical, and imagined they had been possessed by demons possessed in the physical sense of the word. There are dozens of examples—at Loudun, at Aix-en-Provence, at Louviers—of whole convents writhing on the ground, exposing themselves, while alarmed inquisitors in tense excursions.

It all stopped as suddenly as it began, around 1650. The hysteria evaporated, as it had to. Europe was being civilized by trade and prosperity, and books began to reach the man in the street. There was now a reaction in the opposite direction: educated people rejected witchcraft as a superstition. James I of England, who started his reign as a persecutor of witches, ended by believing that the whole thing was nonsense.

This was untrue; but at least it was healthy. The five per cent of natural witches were able to go about their business without the fear of being burnt alive. And now, seven centuries after the start of the witchcraft craze, the wheel has come full circle; witch cults flourish, but they are concerned with magic and occultism rather than the Devil.

Stop Influx Into B.C.? No Way

The childish exchange of insults between Premier Bennett and Opposition Leader Dave Barrett last week over whether or not we should have another California on Canada's west coast paid scant attention to one vital factor.

This factor, of which Bennett is presumably only too well aware, is that short of suffering through a depression there is no hope of B.C. stopping the current influx of new population from other parts of Canada and abroad.

Indeed, it's debatable whether even a depression would slow down the flood of people coming to B.C. Earlier and earlier retirement, freeing people to live where they choose.

B.C.'s climate and scenic beauty would continue to attract more and more of these retirees even if persons still on the work force stopped coming to B.C.

This situation, if it ever came about, would be disastrous for the province because everyone would be hurt. B.C.'s population would still be growing faster than other provinces; there would be a greater need for services, and the rapid increase in the work force of recent years would decline.

A major factor in the prosperity of B.C. has been the 4.5

per cent average annual growth in the provincial work force over the past decade (compared with 2.7 per cent for Canada and 1.75 per cent for the U.S.). This has meant an injection of new skills, new capital and new initiative.

Barrett talks glibly of fighting until the last breath leaves his body (who wouldn't?) against any attempt to create plasticized version of California in this province.

He dismisses the government programs to create new jobs as "pathetic" and writes off any achievements in this field to date as simply progress for the sake of progress.

How does he propose to stop people coming to B.C.? Short of creating a new sovereign state on the Pacific there's no way of keeping other Canadians out.

And there doesn't seem to be any reason to deny ourselves the benefits these newcomers bring, though Barrett seems to imply that is. The NDP leader has a sound argument against free trade with the U.S., which Bennett advocated in a convention speech last weekend, but gets on shaky ground when he suggests, whatever or not Canada drops all tariffs, that Bennett's government is going all out to Americanize this province.

(Barrett conveniently ignored the fact that only two years before his "free trade" speech the premier told another audience B.C. must be careful to avoid the mistake made by California during the peak of its population growth period.)

On the day following Barrett's Tuesday outburst, during which he said the government must stop playing games with the jobless and call a winter election, the premier was able to produce figures which refuted the NDP arguments about failure of the government to create new jobs.

Bennett quoted the latest findings of Statistics Canada which showed the number of employed in B.C. has increased by 73,000 in the past year.

During that same period 57,000 more people joined the labor force and the jobless total was reduced by 16,000 to 53,000 last month for a seasonally adjusted unemployment rate of 6.2 per cent.

Even more impressive were figures from the same survey, which Bennett didn't quote, showing that of the 63,000 jobs created in Canada last month 14,000 were in B.C., which has 10 per cent of the population. In same period, of the total of 9,000 new jobs in Canada, 3,000 were in B.C.

Critics of this government may argue these achievements aren't enough. But the retort from Bennett is that B.C. is doing a lot better than any other part of Canada in meeting the unemployment crisis. And federal statistics bear him out.

Certainly, Barrett has a responsibility to demand that in providing these jobs the quality of life makes B.C. so attractive is safeguarded as much as possible. But he shouldn't ignore the fact that this province is a major growth area on this continent and no government can stop it without creating economic chaos.

If Barrett has a program which will provide jobs in a way which will make this province a better place to live then let him spell it out in detail. He's bound to find a recession in a large number of voters.

If he can't kick the habit of gross oversimplification, which Bennett has made the hallmark of B.C. political life, Barrett may find voters at election time once again choosing the political devil they know so well.

Militancy Expected At Labor Convention

By DON COLLINS
Columnist-Reporter

If forecasts prove true, more than usual will be said by and about women at the five-day annual convention of the B.C. Federation of Labor which begins Monday at Vancouver.

A spokesman for the Working Women's Association formed recently in Vancouver, told the Colonist it was hoped women delegates would be speaking out more forcefully than before at the convention.

The federation itself is very much aware of the more militant stance of women these days.

It is conducting a special conference this weekend in advance of the convention to deal with the problems facing women in the labor market and community.

Women delegates to the main convention were given preference when it came to attendance at the conference. A number of women associated with the women's liberation movement were involved in the task of getting the Working Women's Association off the ground. Among them are union members who don't think conventional unions have been doing all they should have in the matter of women's rights.

Some of this may come out during the convention, which is the main business session of organized labor in B.C.

The main goal of the Working Women's Association is the organizing of women into regular unions and the forming of stronger bonds among women who are already union members.

The women argue that in too many cases they are without equal pay. And where they have won equal pay, companies have stopped hiring them, they say. They claim unions are doing little to correct this.

A number of inter-union jurisdictional battles continue to constitute a threat to labor peace and some of these are expected to get considerable attention at the convention but mostly behind the scenes.

Among these are disputes between the International Woodworkers of America and the building trades unions, as well as the IWA and the International Pulp-Sulphite union.

Jurisdictional matters are left to the parent body, the Canadian Labor Congress, and the federation officers try to keep them off the convention floor. Two years ago there was so much bitter feeling between the carpenters and the IWA behind the scenes that some officials feared all of the building trade unions could pull out of the federation unless a solution could be found.

Vital backroom meetings put an end to this threat. Such a pullout could have meant a loss of possibly 30,000 members to the 151,000-member federation.

Unemployment will also come under the spotlight at the convention. Among the 294 resolutions coming before the expected 500 delegates will be at least one suggesting the formation of a union for the unemployed.

The Victoria Labor Council has submitted a number of resolutions, including one suggesting that the government take over all private hospitals. This grows out of Victoria's unresolved Sandringham Private Hospital strike, which is now more than 13 months old.

School Team Tops Alumni

St. Michael's University School raced to an 18-0 half-time lead and coasted to a 21-10 win over a team of alumni Saturday in an exhibition rugby match on the school's grounds.

Ernie Lawson led the winners, scoring with two tries. Gordon Powell and Greg Felner had a try each and Hayden Swiford kicked a penalty goal and convert.

Rick Dade topped alumni scorers with two tries and Mike Kenough kicked a convert.

Night Hearing

Shots Bring Fine

A 21-year-old man from Vancouver was fined $50 in Sooke Provincial Court Friday night after he pleaded guilty to a charge of using a firearm in a manner dangerous to the safety of others.

The man, Garnet Alexander York, was charged in connection with an incident in which two shots were fired in the parking lot of the Sooke Hotel on Sooke Road late Thursday. No one was injured in the incident.

Sooke RCMP said York was picked up in Sooke where he was working, but his Victoria area address was not known. Judge Eugene Murphy held a special night sitting of court to deal with the charge.

Mariner Orbits

ternational Planetary Patrol, reported observations of Mars through Earth telescopes indicate the storm was beginning to clear. They examined photographs taken at Lowell and six other observatories around the world.

Mariner 9 television pictures sent back earlier during the final million miles of the spacecraft's 248-million-mile journey also seem to indicate the haze was clearing.

But most Martian experts say it could be as long as a month before the haze vanishes.

Other scientists whose specialty is Mars' atmosphere have been elated at watching such a rare event as the storm at close quarters.

Mariner 9 scientists continued to speculate about the mission of the Soviet spacecraft, launched May 19 and May 28. Mars 2 and 3 are each almost five times as heavy as the 2,300-pound Mariner 9, leading to speculation that unmanned landings will be attempted. The Soviet probes are believed to be behind Mariner 9 because the U.S. spacecraft, although launched May 30, left Earth with a higher velocity.

Dr. Carl Sagan, a Mariner 9 scientist from Cornell University, said last week he had talked with Russian scientists who indicated Mars 2 and 3 would attempt landing. But the Soviets have been generally silent about the spacecraft except to report early in the fall that both were in good condition.

The Soviets have agreed to an exchange of information about Mars once all three spacecraft have reached the planet. A special teletype "hot line" between Pasadena and Moscow has been established and tested.

Film Features Centenarians

MOSCOW (UPI) — All the stars of a planned documentary feature film will be more than 100 years old, the Communist party newspaper Pravda said. Movie producers in the north Caucasus, which claims the highest percentage of centenarians in the world, will film the daily lives and philosophies of, among others, 130-year-old Magomet Machigov and 123-year-old Arslan Isakov.

Toy Drive For 700

Saanich Kiwanis are aiming at supplying at least 700 underprivileged Greater Victoria children with used toys this Christmas, collected in club's annual drive. Above, three of volunteer helpers are seen with toys collected so far, Tom Wellburn, Stan

Clark and Bill McCluskey. Used toys or dolls will be welcomed by Kiwanis and may be dropped off at Salvation Army on Johnson, Pacific Insulation on Burnside or Clark and Pattison at 760 Bay.

Early-Day Relic Collapses

Wreckage of covered wooden bridge lies in Nooksack River in Whatcom County, Washington. Built in 1915 as railway bridge, structure is believed to be last of its kind in state and one of eight in all United States. It was used by logging trucks until 1966. (AP)

Pollution Project Shared

MONTREAL (CP) — Quebec and Ontario are to seek federal assistance for a joint $139 million operation to clean up the polluted Ottawa River, it was announced Friday.

The announcement followed a meeting between Quebec Environment Minister Victor Goldbloom and George Kerr, Ontario's minister of energy and resources.

The announcement said assistance will be sought once negotiations begin on the scope of federal participation in the operation.

Plans for the program were prepared by an inquiry established in 1967 by the two provinces. The inquiry was headed by the Ontario Water Resources Commission and the Quebec Water Board.

France Plans Refund Of Israel's Jet Money

PARIS (UPI) — The French government said Saturday it will buy back the 50 Mirage jet fighters sold to Israel but never delivered because of the arms embargo ordered by the late president Charles de Gaulle on the eve of the 1967 Middle East war.

(In Jerusalem, however, an Israeli military spokesman denied any agreement had been reached. He said the talks were still in their "initial stages and no conclusion has yet been reached regarding this issue and other pertinent matters.")

(An Israeli radio correspondent said the spokesman's remarks indicated Jerusalem was surprised and angered by the French announcement. He said it was evident the information was released without prior consultation with the Israeli government.)

The French communiqué indirectly confirmed diplomatic reports that Israel was no longer insisting on delivery of the warplanes but was negotiating on repayment of the $50 million paid for them.

The planes have been stored at the air force base at Chateaudun in central France, and maintained in working condition at an annual cost estimated at $600,000.

Pre-Election Stand on Quebec

NDP Aim Federalist

OTTAWA (CP) — The New Democratic Party officially adopted its leader's federalist position on Quebec Saturday in preparation for the next federal election.

Notably missing from a resolution passed by the NDP national council were such phrases as special status and two nations, considered bad memories from past campaigns.

Instead, the resolution takes the line with which David Lewis won the party leadership last April: Canada must remain united if it is not to be absorbed piecemeal by the United States.

The resolution reflects an election-truce hammered-out between Lewis and the NDP Quebec wing, which would still rather have the NDP call for political, economic and social autonomy for Quebec.

It has two qualifications: That Quebec should not be kept in confederation by force, and that a constitutional convention should be called that would bring together legislators from all provinces to design a new constitution.

The council passed the resolution by a vote of 38 to 7, despite opposition from Jim Laker and Jim Broadbent, both of whom were defeated by Lewis at the April convention.

And while two Quebec representatives gave it half-hearted support, delegate Gabriel Gagnon explained outside the meeting the grounds on which the Quebec wing is accepting the resolution, drafted by a committee of 10

Anglophone and 10 Francophone council members.

"The resolution is only a truce," he said. "We didn't want to fight the question before the next election. When the election is over we will be back fighting for a position of Quebec autonomy."

In fact, at the Quebec NDP convention that approved the resolution in October, a paper was also put out explaining the Quebec wing's interpretation of it.

That paper said Quebec party members would work towards keeping Quebec in "a Canada that it found acceptable."

But it also said it reaffirmed its controversial statement of last February, in which it called for political self-determination for Quebec.

By issuing the paper separate from the resolution, the Quebec wing in effect said its position had not changed, but if a unified position was needed for the next election, it would acquiesce at least for the moment.

The NDP won no Quebec seats in the 1968 federal election.

Market Watchdog Learning New Tricks

By GEORGE GIBSON
Columnist Business Editor

The aim is noble. It is "to seek out the recalcitrant in the market place and pin him to the wall."

Those words may sound a bit drastic but they're the kind of words that are being tossed around when the aims of the reorganized Better Business Bureau of Canada are being discussed.

Those words were used by Carle Bray, a Toronto BBB director last month as bureau directors from across Canada met in that eastern city.

Bray is one of a reorganizing committee that is restructuring the Canada bureau.

Another is William Tindall, manager of the Victoria branch of the Better Business Bureau. He was at that meeting in October and came back with visions of a better day ahead for both the businessman and his customers.

The reorganization is the basis for Tindall's optimism. Under it, the local office will be in all ways "plugged in" to the rest of Canada and the U.S. when it comes to quick information.

A person wanting to know some of the background of the Ace Widget Co. of Winona, Ont., for instance, would be able to find out all he wanted right here, in a matter of hours, not weeks. An electronic data bank and Telex will be used.

The BBBs have their collective eyes on the Competition Act, that particular legislative gem of corporate and consumer affairs minister Ronald Basford.

And joining them in this examination are the BBB's counterpart in the U.S., who feel that their country is on the verge of its own form of competition act. In other words, they are watching the Canadian experience with interest and help.

Several of the U.S. officers of their Council of Better Business Bureaus attended the Toronto meeting. Among them was John O'Brien of Washington, executive vice-president of the council.

O'Brien stated that the goal of his council was "to keep the market place as free as possible and service the consumer with as little governmental rule spelling-out as possible."

Bray, the Toronto man, felt that the individual bureau was not in a strong enough position to "pin" the recalcitrant company, but united they could.

The bureau are not trying to do it all alone. They've invented, urged and all but demanded that business itself become involved.

It is Tindall's hope that eventually businessmen will effectively control and run the business bureaus in Canada as it will be in their own best interests to do so. For one thing, it is their own money that finances the whole project.

The reorganization is not a new thing. It was planned more than two years ago but shelved. The introduction of the Competition Act sparked the revival and the cross-Canada setup should be formalized by May of next year.

Under the new plan, Canada is to be divided into four areas, with B.C. one section of its own. There will be a representative from the business community and one from the BBB in each section who will sit on the national board. Eventually, says Tindall, this board will be predominantly businessmen.

One such businessman, Clarence Atchison, vice-chairman, Investors Group, of Winnipeg, stated that consumerism in Canada is getting out of hand. He added that there is an "urgent requirement for the business community to look after itself to avoid further government encroachment on our activities. We have a real piece of work to do."

Get-Rich-Quick Scheme

Cheque Swindle Backfires

LONDON (UPI) — Nigel Wise's get-rich-quick scheme was as easy as dialing a telephone. It was foiled just as easily by a busy signal.

Step one: Wise, a 19-year-old electronics technician, steals a chequebook and sends a pal, Paul Miell, to a local bank to write a cheque for 300 pounds — about $750.

Step two: The bank clerk picks up the phone and dials the number of the branch on which the cheque is drawn. In the meantime Wise has tapped the second bank's incoming phone circuits.

The clerk, listening on the phone, hears the number ring and a voice answer with the name of the bank. Little does he know the ringing of the phone is a tape recording and the voice is Wise's, intercepting the call.

Yes, says the voice. "Mr. Miell is one of our most valued account holders. Three hundred pounds? Fine. Certainly. Any time."

Step three: Miell and Wise walk off with £300.

Flushed with success, they tried it again, police said today. Disaster struck.

This time, at another branch, the cheque was for £800 — $2,000. As before, the clerk picked up the phone and dialed. As before, Wise was waiting.

But the number was busy.

Without hesitation the clerk dialed a second number, one

Nigel could not have known because it was not listed in the telephone directory. It wasn't busy.

Miell and a girl friend, Maria Goodwin, 18, still were waiting for the payout when the police showed up. Wise was apprehended soon after.

A judge at London's Old Bailey criminal court Friday sentenced Wise to two years behind bars for his trouble and directed Miell to a detention centre for six months.

Sun Story on Canada's Defence Share:

U.S. To End Surplus

VANCOUVER, CP1—The Sun says John Connally, United States treasury secretary, intends to take steps to eliminate Canada's $500 million trade surplus under the Canada-U.S. defence sharing production agreement.

In a dispatch from Washington, the newspaper says Connally will press for removal of Canadian tariffs on defence items made in the U.S.

The Sun says the U.S. also seeks removal of the Canadian preference in the agreement, a provision that allows small Canadian firms with marginal profits to compete against U.S. companies for sales to the Canadian forces.

The evidence, the newspaper says, is in a treasury department letter sent to a New York congressman, Lester Wolff, who complained on behalf of a constituent that an Ottawa firm, Leigh Instrument Ltd., had an unfair advantage because of "Canadian government support" on a contract for 3,000 altimeters for the U.S. Navy.

Congressman Wolff also wrote a letter to the U.S. defence department complaining about the Ottawa company's contract.

"My concern is that the Canadian-U.S. defence agreement notwithstanding, it might prove unwise to permit a non-U.S. firm to be the sole supplier for defence instruments," Wolff wrote, adding that the U.S. should reconsider spending money in other countries when the balance of trade "is in such disarray."

The treasury department's reply, The Sun says, came from William Cates, deputy assistant treasury secretary for industrial nations, finance, who said: "I am writing on behalf of secretary Connally on a tariff which increases the product's price.

The Canadian preference in the agreement allows Canada to add a tariff of 10 per cent of the cost of a product imported from the U.S., although no add-on is made by the United States on products made in Canada.

Connally Confident: 'We're Doing Well'

WASHINGTON (AP)—Treasury Secretary John Connally said Saturday the present international monetary disruption in which currencies are floating against each other could last for "almost an indefinite period."

Connally, returning from a 17-day trip to Southeast Asia, said the present situation of international uncertainty would not harm the United States.

"We're doing very well," Connally told reporters.

Connally said his talks with Japanese officials on currency and trade matters were conducted in an "atmosphere of great understanding. They are willing to help, they're willing to co-operate."

He said that, although it would be difficult for the Japanese, a basic understanding was reached that there would have to be revaluation of the yen and changes in trade policy.

But Connally would not specify how much in the way of revaluation was talked about or whether agreement was reached on specific trade barriers.

Nixon Advised To Sack Finance Policy Mentor

LONDON (AP)—The Financial Times, authoritative business daily, urges President Nixon to fire Treasury Secretary John Connally as his chief negotiator in the world monetary crisis.

"What is becoming more and more apparent is that Mr. Connally has little grasp and understanding of the facts of international financial life," the paper says in an article by its monetary expert C. Gordon Tether.

Tether says the effect of Connally's approach has been to alienate other countries to the extent that some would see the world economy sliding rather than yield to what they regard as U.S. dictation.

He adds: "It is going to be very difficult to conduct a meaningful dialogue with the United States so long as he is heading the American team."

Individual units with a lot in common

Finning is an organization of individually managed divisions, departments and locations. Divisions provide sales, parts and repair service to a particular industry. Engines for marine applications. Lift trucks for materials handling. Small machines for light industrial users. Departments specialize in a particular service. Replacement parts, repair programs, custom engineering, design and installation of warehouse storage and distribution systems. Locations put these specialized services within easy reach of the customer. Fifty-three locations, staffed by 1,677 skilled people, come together to form Finning. Big enough to provide a complete range of services unmatched by any other equipment dealer. Small enough to have a personal involvement with the customer; an individual interest in his equipment, his job and his success in British Columbia and the Northwest Territories.

NAMES in the NEWS

Sentence: Five Lives

SHEBOYGAN, Wis. — Douglas Dean, 19, of Sheboygan, was sentenced Friday to five consecutive terms of life in prison for the murders of his mother and a girl-friend's mother and three brothers.

Sentence was passed by Judge John Buchen despite pleas from the defence that the terms run concurrently.

District Attorney Lance Jones argued that no lighter sentence should be considered, because Dean had been supported by his mother and befriended by his girl-friend's family.

It will be 51 years and three months before Dean is eligible for parole, officials said.

Ann Hammer, the girl-friend whose mother and three brothers were slain, was sobbing after the 25-minute court appearance.

LOS ANGELES — A $15,000 false-arrest judgment was entered against actress Hedy Lamarr because she once accused a former admirer, Donald Blyth, 43, of rape. The actress dropped the charges the next day, Blyth said, but by that time he had been the object of "embarrassing and humiliating" international publicity and had spent a night behind bars.

WASHINGTON, Pa. — Arthur "Buddy" Martin, 23, was sentenced Saturday to death in the electric chair for his part in the New Year's Eve, 1969, slayings of United Mine Workers official Joseph "Rock" Yablonski, his wife and daughter. Martin, 23, Cleveland, Ohio, was the first of five defendants to be brought to trial in the triple slaying.

MONTREAL — A collection of letters written by former Prime Minister Sir Wilfrid Laurier to the wife of his law associate will be auctioned in Montreal Dec. 2. The 40 letters from Laurier to Emilie, wife of Joseph Lavergne, were written between 1891 and 1893 when he was leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons.

Alaska Liquor Firms Admit to Price-Fixing

HONOLULU (AP) — Three of Alaska's largest liquor wholesale firms and their two presidents have pleaded no contest to a federal antitrust charge of price-fixing in Alaska.

The pleas were entered in Honolulu this week before U.S. district court Judge Martin Pence, who had presided over earlier hearings in the case held in Anchorage.

The pleas were entered by Milton Odum, president and director of both Anchorage

CAPE TOWN — Dr. Christian Barnard, the South African heart transplant pioneer, has implanted a new heart into a man who had said he would be satisfied if he lived only a year with it. The patient was identified as Lindsay Rich, 62.

ANTOFAGASTA, Chile — Cuban Premier Fidel Castro visited bachelor workers' camps around the nitrate mines of northern Chile's Atacama Desert Saturday. Castro, making his first trip outside Cuba in seven years, visited the workers in their dormitories of tin and wood that make up the camps of Maria Elena and Pedro de Valdivia in the heart of the desert, which has one of the world's largest deposits of natural nitrate.

TORONTO — Don Mathews, 45, president of a London, Ont., land development and construction company, has announced he would seek the national presidency of the Progressive Conservative party at its convention in Ottawa starting Dec. 5. Earlier in the day, John Pallot, 50, a Port Credit, Ont., lawyer and former member of Parliament for Peel, said he would contest the presidency.

MADRID — A grand-daughter of Generalissimo Francisco Franco is to marry a descendant of Spain's last ruling king, a newspaper has reported. The San Sebastian newspaper Diario Vasco said the engagement between Prince Alfonso-Jaime Borbon Y Dampierre, 35, and Franco's granddaughter, Maria Del Carmen Martinez-Bordiu, 20, was announced in Paris.

NEW YORK — Irving Kahn, who was convicted of bribery and perjury in a Johnstown, Pa., cable television scandal, has resigned as chairman and chief executive of Teleprompter Corp.

LONDON — Pan American World Airways said it was just "a little gesture of goodwill" but it backfired because someone forgot to ask permission. Pan Am had planned to rename one of its Boeing 747 jets "Clipper Scotia" in honor of the wife of Australian Prime Minister William McMahon. But Pan Am neglected to ask McMahon — or his wife, and McMahon's secretary, Reg McDonald, said "the prime minister said he did not want the aircraft named after Mrs. McMahon."

LOS ANGELES — Superior Court Judge Adolph Alexander has sentenced convicted Sharon Tate killer Charles Watson to death, but said that if he tried the case alone without a jury he might have brought in a different verdict because of his own opposition to the death penalty and psychiatric evidence about Watson's mental state and not on any extenuating features in the murder evidence.

VANCOUVER — Funeral service will be held here Monday for James M. McDonald, a Scottish-born merchant who became known as the "Chocolate King" with a world-wide clientele. McDonald, who died Thursday in hospital, came to Vancouver in 1905. He drove a mail stagecoach to raise the money to open a candy shop. McDonald's Fine Chocolates. His clientele included Sir Winston Churchill, U.S. president Herbert Hoover and actress Mae West.

TOKYO — Emperor Hirohito has expressed his "heartfelt gratitude" to the seven European countries he and Empress Nagako visited last month. Speaking at a rare press conference held inside the Imperial Palace, he slighted the protest incidents that occurred during the couple's trip. He said the incidents could happen even in Japan.

Coho Carries Unisex To Ultimate Extreme

TACOMA, Wash. (AP) — There's something fishy about a coho salmon that came in to spawn this fall at Minter Creek.

It's bisexual. Half of the fish is female and the other half is male.

Minter Creek hatchery superintendent Arthur Gallagher said the three-year-old, 23-inch coho "has eggs on one side and the sperm section on the other."

Coal Miners, Firms Agree on New Pact

NEW YORK (UPI) — The United Mine Workers union approved and signed a new three-year contract early Sunday, ending a strike that had killed 100,000 miners for 44 days.

The way was cleared for the post-midnight signing when the 125-member national scale and policy committee of the UMW voted 122-1 with two abstentions to accept the contract.

The Bituminous Coal Operators Association already had approved the pact. The miners were expected to go back to work Monday. Gov. Arch Moore of West Virginia, who acted as a mediator at the talks, hailed the agreement as one that "means a lot to the individual coal miner."

"It brings him up to par with those of his contemporaries in other industries and in some respects beyond," Moore said. Moore estimated the strike cost West Virginia $250,000 a day but said the state still was in good financial shape.

An industry source estimated the cost of the settlement at $1.2 billion over the three years, a 38 per cent increase over the present contract. The source said the contract would result in increased productivity and a decrease in labor unrest and wildcat strikes. UMW president W. A. "Tony" Boyle praised Moore's efforts in helping to reach an agreement.

Driver's Record Lengthy

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio (AP) — A Youngstown man whose car jumped a curb on a busy downtown street Friday and killed six pedestrians has been convicted of five traffic violations since 1960, authorities said Saturday.

Nine other persons were injured in the accident. The driver, identified as James Anderson, 30, was arrested immediately after the incident.

Police said Anderson had been released on $1,000 bond Nov. 6 on a charge of assault with a dangerous or deadly weapon in the shooting of his wife.

What Not To Do

Everyone is a pedestrian at one time or another, so Pedestrian Safety Week, starting Monday in Victoria area, should be widely observed. Problem is, according to Capital Region Safety Council, that most people when walking make mistakes that could get them injured or killed. Here are two common mistakes in downtown Victoria. Left, stopping in middle of crosswalk to chat and right, not using intersection when crossing busy street.

Articulate Young Man Flays 'Imperialists'

'Missionary' Seeks Converts to IRA Cause

By GEORGE INGLES
Colonist Reporter

An articulate young man with a missionary's glint in his eye and an unflinching fervor for the 173-year-old cause of the Irish Republican Army came to Victoria Saturday seeking converts for his cause.

Sean Kenny, a 28-year-old native of Galway who came to North America in May, weighs in at about 150 pounds and possesses a curly shock of black hair. He displays an intensity and certainty that his cause was a just one.

In a pre-meeting press conference at the University of Victoria he, by turn, condemned the "imperialist press, adverse British propaganda, phony religious war, aggressive British troops," and "these Irish girls he hoped would have enough sense not to fraternize with British soldiers."

Billed as the North American representative of the IRA and the joint-general-secretary of the Irish Sinn Féin (the political arm of the Irish revolutionary movement), Kenny lashed out in many directions.

He said he was quite certain that the cause of the Associated Press and United Press International news agencies had been heavily infiltrated by British intelligence personnel, and were committed to misleading the world into believing the Irish conflict was a religious one.

"Ours is an economic struggle," he said, "the working classes fighting for ownership and control of our country, not told by imperialist landowners from foreign countries."

Among the foreign newspaper owners he said were quite a number of "imperialist capitalists from Toronto," who stayed at home in Canada and leached on the Irish resources.

He said British imperialist forces had split the Irish people along religious lines, denied certain civil rights to Protestants and sowed seeds of internal dissent to split the working class within the country.

Kenny, who has worked full-time for the IRA since 1962, said he did not believe, in spite of the split that has been created by the British, "that British troops leaving would create a blood bath," as some British sources have suggested.

"On the contrary, the presence of 16,000 troops on Irish streets has certainly had an unsettling effect," he said. "There were an additional 16,000 men of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and the Ulstermen, Irish volunteers."

Kenny told those at the press conference the IRA is seeking long range concessions from the British, renunciation of Irish sovereignty in Ireland, phasing out of troop occupation and recognition of one united Irish government, without foreign intervention.

He said the short-term aims were the release of 408 internees, banishment of concentration camps, immediate withdrawal of troops from northern hot spots and abolition of repressive legislation. Turning quiet and dispassionate he described actions of British soldiers in a northern Ireland "concentration camp," where hundreds were interned in the past few months.

Prisoners forced to run over broken glass and nails in their bare feet.

Guards using gun butts on prisoners.

Setting vicious dogs on prisoners in confined quarters.

Hanging of prisoners by the thumbs.

Asked why British soldiers, who were not very far removed, ethnically, from their Irish prisoners, would practice such tactics, Kenny said, "They do it on instructions of their masters in Westminster."

Kenny said the IRA was "purely a defence force," and undertook no retaliatory measures, "except against particularly aggressive British troops."

He said the selection of those who would suffer IRA retaliation was made by local committees, after "they have looked into it very deeply, and decided whether it would be wise to retaliate."

On the whole, Kenny said the IRA, while much maligned, was actually not involved in any religious bombings, retaliatory killings (except with good cause) and was more interested in the organization of peaceful demonstrations to achieve its ultimate end of an independent republic.

Headquarters for the movement being introduced by Kenny on his cross-Canada tour - formation of Irish Republican Clubs to support the IRA - is Woodside, N.Y.

'Official Closing Dance'

Last Fling at Crystal

By BRUCE KETCHAM
Colonist Reporter

It was a nostalgic night for a lot of people. "There's a lot of friendship here," it's a most lovely atmosphere. There are people here tonight who have been coming here since they were high school kids," Archie McKinnon, an organizer of the first Saturday night dance at the Crystal Garden said in an interview.

McKinnon, of 1445 Brookside, who retired in 1961 after 41 years of professional Y.M.C.A. work, has seen countless dances at the Crystal Garden. He danced one of his dances there Saturday with Marion Carmichael, of 6886 East Saanichton Road, Central Saanich.

Oak Bay's Brian Smith Seeking Second Term

Oak Bay Alderman Brian Smith, 37, has decided to run for a second council term. Smith, first elected in 1969, told the Colonist Saturday his "one main concern is about development."

"We've really got to show that we mean it and we're not going to spit words all over development."

Smith said that he was also interested in the preservation of parks and the buying of land for parks, and he hoped the council would be able to get the recreation centre "which has been eluding us for many years."

Smith, a lawyer and father of two, lives at 2720 Saanich. He is the only Oak Bay council member so far who has announced his candidacy for the Dec. 11 municipal elections.

"We can't let these areas go just because they've been zoned for apartments for a long time. They should have underground parking, decent setbacks, and there shouldn't be any of those concrete boxes," he contended.

Smith said that he was also interested in the preservation of parks and the buying of

Jack Carmichael, 33, leader of The Ambassadors, was billed as the Crystal Garden's "Official Closing Dance."

The Crystal Garden, which opened in 1925, is scheduled to fade into oblivion at the end of this month when the new swimming pool opens Nov. 27.

All tickets were sold in advance and the estimated 350 dancers were mostly middle-aged.

The Ambassadors played music which included tunes for dances from the Charleston to modern rock. "We went to play music encompassing the years the Crystal Garden has been in existence," Carmichael said.

In a separate interview at the dance, 72-year-old Ed Rutledge said he has worked for the Crystal Garden for about six years.

"I usually work the door but at the old dance like this I usually show up on the floor, you know," Rutledge said.

"There's a lot of oldtimers here and I'm sorry that this is the last one," he said.

Jack Speck, manager of the Crystal Garden from 1961 to 1965, said: "We used to have young kids swimming here who would grow up to dance here and eventually their offspring would swim here."

Harry Leggett, 63, of 536 Paradise, Esquimalt, who went to the dance with his wife, Isabel, sized up the situation in a sentence: "I hate like the dickens to see it go."

Mrs. Leggett, who was sitting with her husband at a table, said: "We just felt we had to have a last fling here."

Orangemen, Thomson Distort IRA Picture

Orangemen and newspaper baron Lord Thomson of Fleet are controlling the Canadian press and distorting the picture that Canadians are given of Irish riots, IRA representative Sean Kenny said Saturday.

"I was astonished when I talked in Toronto," Kenny said at a news conference before an evening talk at University of Victoria.

"The hall was bulging with them. (Orangemen) waving their Union Jacks and pictures of the Queen. There have been hundreds of them, everywhere I have gone in Canada."

The Galway Irishman who is recruiting money and sympathy for the IRA cause in North America, said "You'd be surprised how many papers here in Canada are controlled by Orangemen (implacable foes of the IRA and staunch Protestant loyalists)."

He said Lord Thomson, Canadian-born newspaper magnate whose interests range around the world, "has persistently presented an untrue picture" of the IRA cause, and was doing so in Canada in cities Kenny has visited during the first week of a 2½ week tour.

Kenny said the IRA is blamed for "everything that goes, both over there and in Canada," and most of the problem was an "uninformed public" fed by distortions in the press.

He said there had been at least one threat on his life before he spoke in Vancouver Friday, but "they didn't tell me about it until after I spoke." The threat, he said, was a telephone call, "made by some Orangeman."

He said there have been isolated instances in which the press has painted a true picture of the Irish revolt, "but they are usually overshadowed by the other side of the picture."

Set Weekend

The B.C. Liberal Party executive decided Friday in Vancouver to hold its next provincial convention on a weekend - aiming at encouraging greater attendance.

The convention will be held Saturday and Sunday, May 20-21 in the Penitence Peach Bowl. Date for various ridings to announce candidates for Liberal nomination was set as Wednesday, March 15.

Poor Condition

Dick-Millon, 23, of 1413 Fernwood, remained in poor condition Saturday night in St. Joseph's Hospital with a fractured skull received Sept. 12 when he fell 18 feet from the roof of the apartment building in which he lives, hospital authorities reported.

Citizens' Committee

Views on Punishment Wanted from Parents

As many as 1,000 parents will be asked to give their opinions to the Greater Victoria school district's citizens' committee on corporal punishment in the schools.

The parents will fill in a questionnaire which is expected to cover not only corporal punishment, but more general questions of discipline and punishment in the school system.

School board representative of the 20-man committee, Mrs. Daphne Temple, said in an interview Saturday that the committee had held four meetings since it was chosen Sept. 29, and would meet again Monday.

The committee was trying to be "rather scientific" in its deliberations, she said, and had therefore decided to try to seek the opinions of a representative sample of parents as well as asking for presentations from those who wish to make them.

Later, reports from the public would be asked for. The committee was now considering a sampling present made by two University of Victoria psychology department faculty members, she said, and a decision on the sampling method would likely be made at Monday's meeting.

It is hoped that the committee's deliberations will not drag on for too long, she said, and a tentative target date of late January to February has been set for a report to be presented to the school board.

The committee is the first set up by the board in a plan begun this fall to involve the community more in school affairs.

After it was set up, a public meeting was called to which all interested members of the public could come. Those interested in serving on the committee submitted their names, and 20 were drawn by lot.

Mrs. Temple said the committee had a good cross-section of the community among its members. "We have teachers and students and parents, and some retired people," she noted.

If the first committee is successful, it is expected that others will be set up to examine other aspects of education.

Mandarins Are Coming

The mandarins are coming. The mandarins are coming. Japanese mandarin oranges, that is.

More than 400,000 boxes of the juicy, easy-to-peel oranges arrived in Vancouver Friday, and some are already in Victoria, a spokesman at King Brothers Ltd. shipping agents said Saturday.

A record total of 3.8 million boxes of the oranges will be sent to Canada to fight sales between now and Christmas.

Canada currently buys almost all of the Japanese export crop of fresh mandarin oranges.

Shipment is arriving earlier this year because of an excellent growing season for mandarins in Japan, a spokesman for Daido Openculture Ltd. said. His firm is one of the largest importers of the oranges in Canada.

Mandarin oranges have long been a special Christmas treat in western Canada, but recently their popularity has spread to eastern Canada as well.

Girl Injured

Greta Anderson, 12, of 4890 Majestic Drive, Saanich, was released from St. Joseph's Hospital Saturday after she was treated for minor injuries received earlier in the day in a motorcycle collision.

Driver Improved

Douglas Jack MacDonald, 35, of 123 Hampton, Saanich, reported since Oct. 29 in fair condition in Royal Jubilee Hospital with injuries received in a one-car accident early that day, was in satisfactory condition Saturday night, hospital authorities reported.

Trades Bring Instant Result Cougars Saddle Broncos, 5-3

Victoria Cougars involved in major trades this week, received instant help from two newcomers Saturday in defeating Swift Current Broncos, 5-3.

Cougars, involved in trades with Brandon and Vancouver this week, had standout performances. Igor Baranov and Jerry Duda, two of four players obtained from the Wheat Kings.

Chernov, a husky six-foot centre, was teamed with Wayne Blanchin and Duda and the trio accounted for three goals, two by Blanchin, another recent addition. Blanchin and Chernov also served as penalty killers in the rough game which was played before 2384 fans at Memorial Arena.

Swift Current, cellar dwellers in the Western Canada Hockey League's Eastern Division, appeared tired, playing their third game in as many nights on the coast. Broncos were hesitant around the goal and missed numerous opportunities to score early in the game.

Cougars, on the other hand, took advantage of defensive mistakes to jump to a 3-0 first-period lead and a 5-2 edge after the second period.

ANOTHER FOR BOOMER
Winger Len Chalmers and defenceman Jim Atamanenko, with his booming slap shot, were the other Victoria marksmen.

Alec Kogler scored two goals, including a power-play marker, and diminutive centre Terry McDougall, one of the few standards for Broncos, scored their third goal.

Chalmers, Blanchin and Atamanenko scored in the first period and Blanchin and Duda put Victoria ahead, 5-1, midway through the second period.

Swift Current came to life following a penalty to Jack McHargy and cut the margin to three goals just before the period ended.

Goalkeeper Henry Durbey, badly beaten on three of the five Cougar goals, was steady in the latter half and finished with 26 stops, compared to 25 for Darryl Fedoruk.

McHargy and Terry Rushton were involved in the only major fight of the game, a third-period altercation following a spearing penalty to the Cougar defenceman.

The combatants resumed fighting near the penalty box and McHargy, the instigator, had a 15-minute misconduct tacked on by referee Wilf Paip.

Cougars, winless since defeating Calgary on Oct. 19, remained in last place in the Western Division but are now only one point behind Vancouver Nats.

The victory opened a four-game home stand, the longest of the young season for the rookie Cougars who have just completed a six-game swing through the Eastern Division.

Medicine Hat Tigers will visit Victoria Tuesday followed by the Edmonton Oilers Thursday and Saturday nights.

Vikings Swamp Dinosaurs Vikettes Also Get Sweep

University of Victoria's entries in the Western Canada Inter-Collegiate Athletic Association basketball leagues made it two wins in two nights Saturday.

Gary Taylor's Vikings pulled away from a 28-27 half-time margin to score a 62-49 triumph over University of Calgary Dinosaurs in a men's game and Mike Gallo's Vikettes took the come-from-behind route for a 52-46 win over University of Calgary Dinnies at UVic gymnasium.

Vikings, who beat the Dinosaurs, 66-45, Friday night, kept up their tenacious checking and got exceptional outside shooting from rookie Jim Hunter and Gord Hoshal in the second half.

Hunter, held to one point in the opening half, connected for nine more points in the last half and Hoshal picked up 11 of his 15 points after the intermission.

Tom Child held the Vikings' hot hand in the opening half, scoring 11 points and ending up with a game total of 13.

Danny Quance of Calgary was the game's top scorer with 18 points, scoring 11 of them in the first half. Gary Elliott and Jim Lathrop had 10 points each for the Dinosaurs, who gave up the ball 18 times and were forced into jump situations 11 times. Vikings forced 16 turnovers and 12 jump balls Friday night.

Shaw Scores In Two-Mile Holiday Race

Bruce Shaw topped a field of 13 in the annual Remembrance Day cross-country race, completing the two miles around Beacon Hill Park in 10:30 minutes.

The unattached runner finished six seconds in front of runner-up Fraser Syme of YMCA and 13 seconds ahead of third-place finisher Jim Powell of University of Victoria.

First woman to finish was Ulla Hansen of Victoria Mercantiles, who was seventh in 13:24 minutes, 29 seconds ahead of Debbie Reid of Victoria Evergreens, who was eighth.

Additional Sports Pages 15, 16, 17, 19

rose Jossil, who suffered a deep cut to her hand and a bruised head when she slammed into the end wall at the seven minute mark of the second half, finished with 13 points, three of them at a crucial stage after the midship.

Bonnie Schmidt had 10 points in the first half but was unable to score after Gallo assigned guard Yvonne Letellier to check the Calgary player in the last half. Raenele MacDonald, who also had 10 points, was the only other Dinnies in double figures.

Another Victory

VANCOUVER — University of Victoria, the only team to have five runners finish, claimed the B.C. cross-country junior men's championship here Saturday.

The 3000-metre event, a rerun of a race held two weeks ago and ruled void because the majority of competitors got lost on the course at Stanley Park was won by Mike Loneran of Vancouver Grizzlies Striders in the time of 27:06 minutes.

Jim and John Powell of UVic finished second and third, respectively. Other UVic finishers were Jeff Hawker, eighth; Alex Stuart, 12th; and Wally Thorne, 13th.

Tigers Lend Hand

Edmonton Oil Kings scored a bruising 8-4 victory over Flin Flon Bombers in Flin Flon Saturday night and got an assist from Medicine Hat Tigers to take over sole possession of first place in the Western Division of the Western Canada Hockey League.

The Tigers grabbed a 5-1 win over Calgary Centennials, who had been tied with Edmonton for first place, in Medicine Hat.

In Saturday night's other game, Winnipeg Jets nipped Saskatchewan Blades, also 5-1, in Winnipeg.

The Oil Kings took 14 of 18 penalties as they dominated the fights and the scoring.

Rangers Run Streak to 13 Canadiens Get New Heroes

New York Rangers, unbeaten in their last 13 games but only two points ahead, and Montreal Canadiens, showed no signs of slowing down Saturday in their race for National Hockey League supremacy.

Jean Ratelle led Rangers past Buffalo Sabres, 5-2, while Canadiens had new heroes in their 5-1 conquest of Minnesota North Stars.

Centre for the league's hottest line, Ratelle scored the first New York goal and set up linemates Rod Gilbert and Vic Hadfield for scoring shots.

Gilbert's goal, his 13th of the season, gave him 26 points and moved him three points ahead of Phil Esposito of the Boston Bruins. Hadfield, who also had an assist, moved into second place with 27 points and Ratelle boosted his point total to 25.

Rangers dominated play throughout, outshooting the Sabres, 46-21, but the score was kept reasonably respectable by the acrobatic netminding of Roger Crozier.

Gilbert celebrated his 21st birthday by scoring Sabres' first goal and passing to rookie Rick Martin for the second.

In Minneapolis, Claude Larose scored the first two Montreal goals and Mario Turbi, reaching for the stardom predicted for him, took it from there with his eighth, ninth and 10th scoring shots of the season.

Larose's second goal came while he was killing a penalty late in the first period and Turbi got it to 3-0 with a power-play goal midway through the second period.

North Stars had a 42-32 edge in shots but rookie Ken Dryden was again sharp and only Charlie Burns, who made it in the second period, could get the puck past him.

Other winners Saturday were Detroit Red Wings, Pittsburgh Penguins and St. Louis Blues, while Vancouver Canucks and the Maple Leafs split the points in Toronto.

Penguins had the Kings down, 4-0, then had to score the last two goals to come out on top and strengthen their grip on third place in the West Division.

Veterans Ken Schinkel, who scored, and Bryan Hextall, who made the pass, climaxed fine games by combining for the 5-4 goal. Both wound up with two goals and two assists.

Canucks got great goading from George Gardner to get the point that kept them within a point of the fourth-place Leafs. A power-play goal by Wayne Maki tied the score midway through the third period. Leafs having taken a 2-1 lead in the middle 30 minutes.

Griff Pads Lead In Scoring Race

CHAMPAIGN — Dave Griff increased his lead in the Vancouver Island Hockey League scoring race Saturday night, helping Champaign Blues to a 7-4 victory over University of Victoria Norsemen.

Griff fired two goals, his 14th and 15th in seven games, and added two assists to give him 21 points, three more than Ted Saskatchewan of Butler Brothers and Don Smith of the Blues, who had three goals.

Dennis Hudson and Gord Williams were the other Champaign scorers. Dennis Thompson and Don Gennell got the Norsemen's goals.

Blues' coach, the Norsemen 46-24, with goalskeeper Rick Hall of the Norsemen making 39 stops. Vikings took a 2-1 lead after the first 20 minutes, fell behind, 2-4, after the second period before being outscored, 4-2, in the last period.

The game was a rough affair with 14 minutes in penalties being called, including two misconducts.

PORT ALBERNI — Victoria Cubs poured in six goals in the second period to erase a 2-1 Port Alberni lead and go on to a 7-4 decision over the Timbermen in a Vancouver Island Junior "B" Hockey League game Saturday night.

Mark Purdy, Mel Bridgman, Danny Peck, Kerry Brewster, Kim Bowles, Doug Rose and Al McLaren were the Victoria scorers.

Laurie Smith, Mike Yesso, Gordon Lefebvre and Allen Martin got Port Alberni's goals.

Squash Fastest-Growing Sport in Britain

By IAIN MacLEOD
LONDON (CP) — "Squash is the ideal therapy for tired businessmen," says one of the game's enthusiasts.

The word seems to be spreading. Squash has become the fastest-growing sport in Britain in recent years. And it appears to be headed for a financial boom.

Since 1966 the number of courts has doubled and the number of players has trebled. Business concerns are starting to take an interest and so far this season more than 120,000 has been put up for development of facilities and for sponsorship.

Although there are one million players in Britain today, less than 200 courts are available. Only now does the Squash Rackets Association see a solution to the problems of inadequate facilities.

"With few financial resources of our own in the past, we were unable to meet the problem at all," an association spokesman said. "But with the sudden interest by big concerns in the sport, the future looks much rosier."

But the SRA has to look to the spectators as well as the players. Normally, there is room for 50 to 100 onlookers at a squash court, but courts being built now and in the future will have glass walls, allowing a view of the game from all sides instead of just from the rear.

Spectators mean sponsorship, says the association, and with the 850 affiliated clubs making a concerted effort to improve spectator facilities, money has flowed more easily into the game since 1970.

A big concern has put up $5,000 for a knock-out competition while one health-food firm is sponsoring four tournaments for £1,500. A tobacco company, which last year donated £1,000 to the SRA when a British team was sent to New Zealand for the world championships, has increased this figure to £4,000 for next year's British open championships.

The game has taken time to gain impetus in Britain. Early records of squash date back to 1850 when it was played in high-society schools.

It was not until 1920 that the sport became entrenched and the first amateur championships were held two years later. The Squash Rackets Association was formed in 1928 to co-ordinate the handful of clubs then existing.

Nicklaus on Rampage Putts Roll In for 63

PALM BEACH GARDENS, Fla. (AP) — Jack Nicklaus inscribed his way to a brilliant, nine-under-par 63, stormed into first place in the individual race and paced the United States into the lead in the team competition Saturday in the third round of the World Cup golf tournament.

"It was just one of those putting rounds," the 31-year-old strongman shrugged after his record effort on the East Course, a demanding 706-yard layout at the PGA National Golf Club.

HOT STREAK

Nicklaus, playing with the smaller English ball-players have the option of using either the small or large ball in this international competition — used only 25 strokes on the greens, and made his birdie on a birdie-eagle-birdie-birdie string starting at the fifth hole.

"Actually, I played better Friday," Nicklaus said. "I missed only one fairway in that round and had the ball closer to the hole. But this time the putts went in."

He posted a 54 hole total of 200, 16 under par, as he swept past second-round leader Gary Player of South Africa.

Player, Nicklaus' house guest, could manage only a 71 and was in second place with 307.

Nicklaus and partner Lee Trevino, heavily favored in this annual event which drew two-man teams from 46 nations, had a leading team total of 415, 17 under par.

Trevino, troubled with his putting, had a 71 for 215.

"Jack is playing absolutely incredibly," Trevino said. "And I'm just dead weight. And I guess he's feeling it. It's tough in competition like this where your partner is just hitting everything dead on the flag and making all those birdies—and you can't help him. You feel the pressure and start trying too hard."

Player and partner Harold Henning kept South Africa in second place with a 421 team total, six strokes behind Henning, who sometimes plays the American tour, had a third-round 70.

No other team was anywhere close. It was another six strokes back to New Zealand, represented by lefty Bob Charles and John Lister, with a team total of 427. Argentina, with Roberto de Vicenzo and Florentino Molina, was the only other team under par after three rounds, one under at 431.

In the individual race de Vicenzo, who had a 71 in the warm, sunny weather, was third at 210.

Then it was Charles and Liang-Huan Lu of Taiwan, who had a 71 in the warm, sunny weather, was third at 210.

those parts came when he hit his tee shot in the water on the 13th. He took his drop, punched a nine iron to four feet and made the putt.

The only bogey came on the 15th, where he hit a fairway trap, then found a trap along the green.

The Canadian team of Moe Norman of Gifford, Ont., and Wilf Homenuik of Winnipeg had a total of 434, nineteen strokes behind the leaders. Norman shot a 71 Saturday for 215, while Homenuik was at 219 after scoring a one-over-par 73.

By MAX LOW
Speedy Gorge Molsons, who have been setting the artificial turf at Empire Stadium alight but struggling at home, broke their jinx at Royal Athletic Park Saturday by shutting out North Shore Labatts, 3-0.

It was their first loss in six matches for the Pacific Coast Soccer League leaders and the first victory in three home games for the youthful league newcomers.

IT WAS MUDDY
All of it wasn't good soccer. The atrocious condition of Royal Athletic Park made anything clever almost impossible. But there were enough glimpses of talent, enough excitement, and three well-taken goals to please the crowd of 650, which included a party of 250 children hosted by the Kiwanis Club of Victoria.

The victory moved Gorge into third place, two points behind North Shore and one point behind second-place Victoria West-United.

West-United edged University of British Columbia Thunderbirds, 3-2, in Vancouver Saturday to tighten the league race and set the stage for the first clash between the two Victoria teams at Royal Athletic Park on Saturday, Nov. 27.

NEEDLESS FRET
Gorge coach Larry DeCosta had been worried the heavy ground would take away the speed advantage the young Victoria side has had over opponents in Vancouver matches.

It did, but DeCosta didn't need to worry.

Adapting far better to the mud than their opponents, Gorge attacked from the start and took the lead for the first time in any of their home games, at 21 minutes, when centre-half Dennis Sommer scored from the penalty spot. Striker Danny Henry made it 2-0 at the 27-minute mark when he pounced on a rebound after a shot by John

Blissett and tapped it into the corner. Blissett, moved by DeCosta from the right wing to inside-left and by far Gorge's most effective forward, had beaten

Bill Grant with a hard shot, but the ball hit the cross bar and bounced back into play.

North Shore, trying desperately to get back into the game, enjoyed 75 per cent of the possession in the second half and credit must go to the Gorge defence for keeping them out.

Graham Lee handled well in goal and was at times spectacular, but he had a lot of help from Sommer and full-back Randy Crook and more than a little luck in getting his shutout.

Crook and Sommer, although beaten several times in the air by the tall North Shore forwards and midfield men, were deadly with their checking and footwork and both had their best game of the season.

Quite against the run of play, Gorge swept upfield 29 minutes into the second half. Rick Lamoureux crossed a beautiful ball and Bob Blissett, playing his best game since returning from a trial with Everton in England, headed in for the third goal.

Homecoming Day Ruined by USC

University of Southern California spoiled Homecoming Day at the University of Washington by squeezing out a 13-12 Pacific 8 Football Conference victory over the Huskies.

An alert defence set up 10 of the Trojans' points and kept a rein on the passing activities of Sonny Sixkiller for most of the game.

Sixkiller passed for one touchdown and set up the second major score for his team with three successive completions but a field goal and touchdown were scored by Trojans after interceptions.

Quarterback Jimmy Jones set a USC record when he scored on a seven-yard run in the third quarter. It was the 42nd touchdown in which he has figured.

Boston's Hockey Nuts Set Record In Supporting Bruins' Farm Club

BOSTON (AP) — In a city where hockey is not a sport but an addiction, Boston Braves set a record last Tuesday against Providence Reds.

As one observer noted: "This is a hockey town, and they're all hockey nuts."

A HOMESTEADER
Brad Wells of Melrose is one of those self-confessed addicts. He is a season-ticket holder of both the Bruins and the Braves, and shows preference for neither one nor the other.

"It's great hockey," he said on the night of a Braves game.

"You see the young kids coming up the future Bruins. They're one step away. There's no question that I enjoy them as much as the Bruins, but I'm a hockey nut anyway. Been coming here for 20 years."

THEY CAME BACK
James Wilson of Arlington used to own season tickets to the Bruins until he became the father of four children. Then he had to sell the tickets to help meet some of the bills. Now he and his wife come to see the Braves.

"We just like hockey," he said. "These kids are trying to make the big leagues and put out all they have. They give you 100 per cent effort all the time. Besides, Bruins' tickets are impossible to get."

It is the Bruins, unquestionably, that have made Boston the hockey centre of the United States.

SAVCHUK LET FUME
Boston Garden has sold out for professional hockey ever since the 1955-56 season, when the Bruins acquired goalie Terry Sawchuk from Detroit Red Wings. He was Boston's first all-star in years.

Today, the Bruins have an abundance of all-stars led by Bobby Orr and Phil Esposito. When the team won the Stanley cup two years ago, thousands swarmed the streets of downtown Boston for a victory parade. Scrappy winger Johnny McKenzie set the tone of the affair when he poured a can of beer over Mayor Kevin H. White's head.

To the fans, the Bruins still are the best of the town, but the Braves are the baby Bruins, and thus deserve special attention. They may be the second favorite, but not by much.

Through eight home games, the Braves have drawn $3,714 fans, an average of more than 10,000 a game. There are about 6500 season ticket holders.

In an "A" veterans division match involving a Victoria player, second-seeded Mitch Hiddleston of Vancouver defeated Dr. Kimble Greenwood, 3-1.

The "C" division final will be an all-Victoria affair. Guy Screech, who downed Don McAdam of Vancouver, 3-0, in one semi-final Saturday, will meet Jim Laing, who beat Ken Smith of Vancouver, 3-0, in the

Britain Plans $50,000 Open As Europe's Richest Motor Race

LONDON (CP) — Europe's richest motor race is set for the first time in 1972, when the British Open will be an all-British event, because any sort of car can take part.

The race, with 120,000 prize money plus supplementary prizes, will be run at Brands Hatch in Kent, 30 miles south of London, Aug. 28, a Monday bank holiday.

NOT COMPARABLE

Although the prize money is huge by European standards, it is not comparable to the $100,000 prize offered for the winner of the United States 500 in the United States, where the top prize may run well over $50,000.

Organized by the British Racing and Sports Car Club, the race will cover 118 laps of the 3.8-mile Brands Hatch road track.

The race will be unique because it will be the first 700-horsepower cars of the Canadian-American Challenge Cup series competing against the smaller and lighter Formula 1 models, the thoroughbred of motorsport.

It will not count for any championship because it is an event for any car running on normal pump or turbine fuel.

The Bruce McLaren motor racing team is among those who have already said they will take part. This team has been successful in three different classes, including Formula 1 and Indianapolis, and it will enter three cars.

Says Phil Kerr, a director: "We shall judge our bets at this stage by entering a Can-Am car, a Formula 1 and a special."

John Surtees expects to enter two cars, so does Graham Hill, but the owner of V12-powered Lotus cars, Colin Chapman, has said he will put his name against three cars, one of which will aim at certainly being its four-wheel-drive, turbine-engined amphibious machine, and which will have also said they will run cars.

Among overseas teams which expect to enter are the American organization of Andy Granatelli, Matra, Porsche and Ferrari.

There is to be no limit on the cars' fuel capacity. But race rules, set by the Fédération Internationale de L'Automobile, will allow a 24-litre, 65-mile consumption race offering a purse of $5,000 with $500 to the winner. In the big race even 20th place earns $500.

A special test day early in August has been decided upon to give a chance to all those who want to see the new technology, which will in turn develop the race.

Company Slips Out Of Can-Am Backing

WESTPORT, Conn. (CP) — president of public affairs, stated:

After careful consideration, we have decided at this time our company must move out of its sponsorship of the Canadian-American Challenge Cup series of road races.

A. Tracy Bird, executive-director of the Sports Car Club of America said several firms have expressed an interest in taking over sponsorship of the series, but that no one could be named at present.

Star Quits In Protest

SEATTLE (AP) — Larry Worley, defensive lineman for the University of Washington football team, said Friday he was quitting the game because of the "unpleasant effort" of head coach Jim Owens and defensive coach Bob Schloredt.

Worley, a junior from Wenatchee, had intercepted three passes and made 75 tackles — 22 of them unassisted — in 1970. He was named MVP and had the ball for better Steve Windowski.

Owens and Schloredt declined to comment.

Figureheads of the road

Familiar sight was Packard seagull in the 30s, but this one was on powerful 1936 model owned by a bootlegger and gambler who was one of U.S. imports to Canada.

Old cars. Classic cars. Cars with life and breath and dignity that they wear like a mantle of individuality that can never be copied by the most expensive charmer from the modern assembly line, no matter how customized.

Manufactured painstakingly by the talented and loving fingers of artisans to whom time was not relative to quality, and performance was a superlative to be fettered only by the laws of man, not the ability of those cams and shafts and pistons to supply the thrust for those shining steeds that breath nostalgia in their every gleam.

These are the classic cars, the ones that made their name by virtue of their sheer workmanship, their individuality of purpose, decreed by those with wealth to whom a car was only a car, but a classic custom car was an institution.

Cars like the 1941 Packard, built to order in Pasadena for the late Clark Gable, capable of doing 80 m.p.h. in second gear, and riding like a silken dream in electric over-drive at speeds to compare with anything on the road.

Cars like the 1936 Packard once owned by a bootlegger, possessing an automatic lubrication system, air boosted brakes, shock absorber-setting controls, and a 12-cylinder in-line engine.

Built by the skilful hands of men, not machines, they lived their lives, many of them, in grand fashion for which they were intended, for rajahs or robbers, sporting ladies or sporty men, tycoons or hucksters, royalty or ranchers.

Among the hundreds of thousands of classic car lovers, a few distinguished ones have visited Victoria's Classic Car Museum at Burdett and Douglas, a plush hostelry, fittingly enough a former service station — John Wayne and Sebastian Cabot of movie fame, Harry James of trumpet fame, and William Harrah, Reno, Nev. gambling entrepreneur.

"I would rather drive a classic Packard any day, than the most expensive new car made," is the opinion of Murray Gammon, proprietor of the establishment, which opened in June, and it was his love for classic cars that made it a must for him to open the place to house his gleaming treasures.

Whether they are on display in some museum, in Victoria or Sarasota, or whether they are stabled in some three-car garage, the pride and joy of some wealthy enthusiast, the classic cars have powers not even given to most humans.

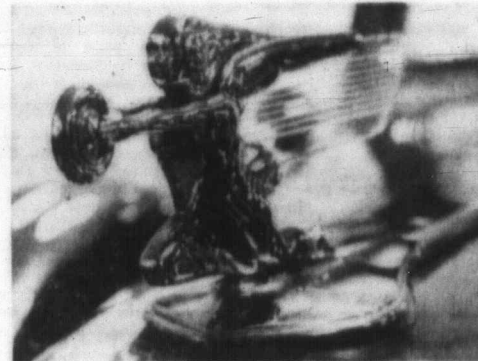

They can still create whistles of envy.

Sturdy ram on hood of this 1936 Dodge coupe was well-known sign in 30s and 40s.

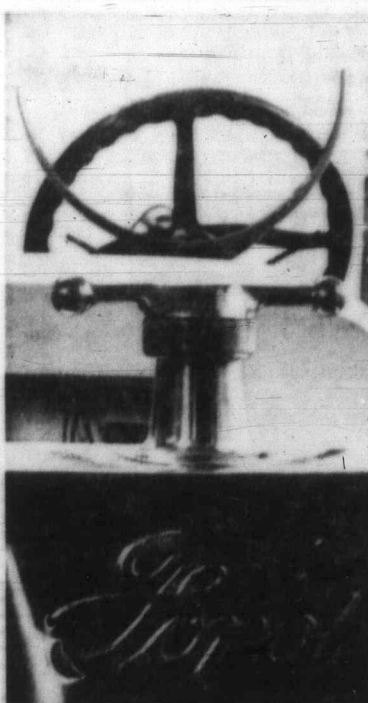

Lady with elegance and dignity was this Rolls Royce radiator cap on 1936 convertible coupe that still is factory-fresh and ready to go. Goose in flight (at top) was familiar sight to riders in Ford's last of a line, Model 31-A.

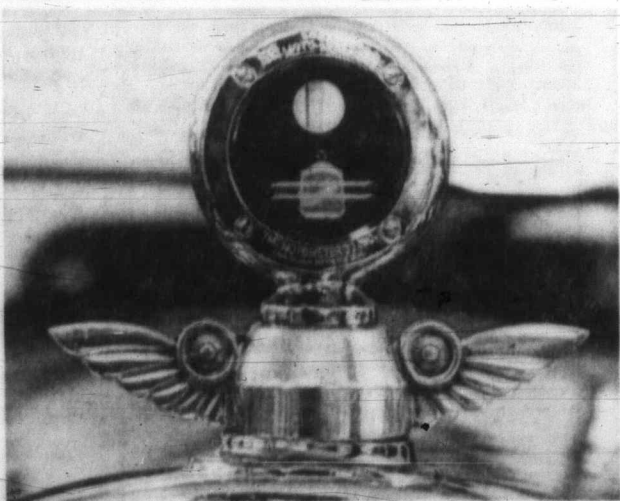

Packard's graceful Goddess of Speed, clutching wheel, led King George VI and Queen Elizabeth on a portion of their royal visit to Canada in 1939, gracing the nose of specially-built Packard touring car.

This 1915 Model-T Ford with monocle windshield sported dog-bone radiator cap, neat but not elegant.

Thermometer on hood of this 1922, seven-passenger Packard touring car told temperature. Wings and aircraft told of Packard engine's prowess on land and in air.

Ford's greyhound radiator cap, used on the early V-8, 1933 through 1936, tops elegant glass fibre hood of a facsimile model of a 1934 Ford V-8, built entirely by hand by Andrew Timmis of Victoria.

Streamlined radiator cap graced nose of 1947 Lincoln Continental with 12-cylinder V-engine, a postwar powerhouse.

Hawaii. Fly one way. Enjoy the other.

Oriana sails from Honolulu, January 20.

Sailing aboard a magnificent P&O Cruise ship between Hawaii and Vancouver is like getting a vacation on top of your Hawaiian vacation.

You get four full days of Pacific cruising, sunning, pool swimming and deck-chair dozing. At night, you enjoy fine food in an elegant dining room and stimulating nightlife among shipmates from all over the world. Plus, the whole four days, you'll be served in traditional British style.

You can fly to Honolulu and sail back to Vancouver on P&O for just $287.

We think the extra vacation time at sea you get by flying to Hawaii from home can be the most enjoyable vacation of them all. And we'd like to tell you all about it. P&O, The British Cruise Line, 409 Granville Street, Vancouver 2, B.C. (604) 682-3811.

TRAVEL TIPS

Greek Beaches Best

Glyfada, Greece — Like all Europe's capitals, Athens is jammed with U.S. conventions: Accountants, optometrists, Lions Club and Spiro Agnew. Spent a day fighting for rooms, cabs, crowded restaurant tables. Then we rented a car from Hertz and drove out to the beaches an hour from downtown Athens.

The plush Astir Hotel was sold with a U.S. tour. Desk clerk offered a one-bedroom bungalow at $50-a-day.

But — at this time of years, Athenians are no longer at the beaches at Glyfada. Empty and dozens of GOOD hotels with PLENTY of rooms. Last room for $6 a day. Includes breakfast. The Delfini. Pleasant location. Lobby full of caged birds. Siamese cat going neurotic watching birds out of reach. Few guests, so all hands anxious to be of service.

Weather splendid. October-November. Warm days. Outdoor dining at night. Little Glyfada has street of "steak houses."

Best buy: Drive fifty miles down to the tip of peninsula. Magnificent Temple of Poseidon ruins on hilltop ending in the sunlit blue Aegean Sea. One hundred yards away, the Belvedere. Cottage for two: $15 a day with meals. Swimming pool. Shaded by olive trees. Locker bar — your own bottles.

Take it with TWO meals. Eat lunches at two good taverns on the beach and the Hotel Argon.

"We hear so much about the rush and crush flying overseas, we wonder if it can be avoided?"

The big terminals ARE murder. Even if you've been there, next time you find it's all been changed. Kennedy at New York is a killer. Avoid it by using other cities. Out of Chicago — lots of lines going abroad. Out of Montreal, (Air Canada and Irish International, probably others.)

Big improvement: European Customs not holding inspection lines. In Greece, Spain and France, no customs inspection. England simply asks if you have anything, like extra liquor, cigarettes, presents. But coming home, visiting the Virgin Islands in October. But is this hurricane season? One of the hurricane hunter pilots sends me this way of remembering:

U.S. Customs looks into nearly everything. Younger you are, the deeper they dip.

"July, stand by."
"August, it's on us."
"September, remember."
"October, all over."

Newest from a jet-lagger. In crowded summer (and even now) long lines wait at mail des of American Express. May take an hour for your turn. Try this: Have mail sent "hold for arrival" to BIGGEST hotel in town. The concierge keeps it (if you get a letter, you might tip him a quarter (local money).)

Don't forget to carry your passport when cashing travellers checks. Must have it. (American Express in Madrid charged me half a per cent to cash mine — the ones I paid them ONE per cent to buy.)

AFRICAN SAFARI
Visit world famous Treetops near Mt. Kenya. Masai Mara, Serengeti, Ngorongoro, Mt. # Comments Pilots Dread Hearing

By HAL BOYLE

NEW YORK (AP) — Remarks an airplane pilot gets tired of hearing,

"Do you get another ring around your sleeve every time you take an airplane up and bring it down safely?"

"Be careful going to the cockpit, Judy. Our fly boy today is Roger the Pincher. He's got more hands than an octopus."

"If I took out $50,000 insurance and named you the beneficiary, sir, how would that affect my chances of coming down alive?"

"When you pass over Omaha, would you mind circling around it a few times? My son Rodney was born there, but he's never seen it from the air."

"I suppose you guys are just like sailors and have a girl or two in every port."

"After we get up in the air, would you mind opening one of the windows? It's getting a bit stuffy in here."

"Stop! Stop! I've changed my mind. I've decided I want to go by railway after all."

"If the food on this airline is so good, pilot, why are you carrying your own lunch?"

"Tonight in Calcutta, tomorrow in Rome. The world's getting to be just a big fat yawn, isn't it?"

The only "boat plane" cruises to Mexico from Vancouver. From $385.

This December, you can join a "boat plane" cruise to Mexico from Vancouver. First you jet to San Francisco, then you board a great British cruise ship — and fares begin at just $385.

Biggest, fastest ship.

On P&O's 42,000-ton S.S. Oriana — the biggest, fastest ship in Mexico cruise service, you'll have the greatest choice of companions, acres of open decks to roam, three swimming pools, plus roomy lounges, spectacular view galleries and, of course, an English pub.

Mazatlan, Puerto Vallarta, Acapulco.

At 26 knots, you'll steam to Mazatlan's magnificent beaches and quiet, shaded streets.

You'll see Puerto Vallarta — perhaps the most beautiful spot on the entire Pacific Coast.

And sample Acapulco's nightlife, glittering modern hotels and small, colorful shops.

Two 9-day cruises.

There are two cruises to choose from, sailing from San Francisco Nov. 28 and Dec. 10.

And one price includes just about everything — international travel, room, meals, entertainment.

Won't you come with the British to Mexico and sunshine this winter?

For information or reservations, call your travel agent or P&O.

'Environmental Politics'

SEATTLE (AP) — A bill to delay approval of the proposed Trans-Alaska oil pipeline is "the worst sort of environmental politics," James H. Douglas, president of the Seattle Chamber of Commerce said Saturday.

Rep. Les Aspin, (D-Wisc.), introduced a bill this week requiring a "comprehensive and independent" study of a trans-Canada pipeline to the Midwest as an alternative to the proposed North Slope-Valdez route.

Staircase leads to smog-alert chamber

Smog Shelter

Inventor's $100,000 'Dream Home'

By CHARLES HILGNER
Colonial-Los Angeles Times Service
MANHATTAN, N.Y. (AP) — Inventor Bill Bounds has built a three-room, fully furnished underground escape chamber.

He did not erect it because he fears an atomic blast.

He built it to escape from smog.

"It's no laughing matter," insisted the inventor of the first automatic cartridge camera. "It's deadly serious."

"Did you ever think the day would come when children wouldn't be able to play outside because of smog?"

"Well, that day is here. And smog keeps getting progressively worse."

Bounds' smog-alert chamber is reached by a spiral staircase winding 20 feet into the ground in a well-like shaft.

It is one of many unusual features of a home he and members of his family have been building for five years.

The inventor has spent $100,000 so far constructing his three-bedroom, solid concrete, 3,400-square-foot home and his smog-escape cellar.

A perfectionist, the 47-year-old man deliberately set out to construct a home so well-built it will last at least 500 years.

"It is my hope my descendants will continue to live in this house for generations and generations."

Bounds said one thing that motivated his building a dream house was the fact that he was a "poor kid."

"We lived in a run-down neighborhood when I was growing up," he said. "We were never sure from one day to the next whether we were going to be living in the same house."

"I always dreamed of having a house of my own. One I wouldn't have to move out of."

Bounds, a high school dropout, invented the Ectron, the first automatic cartridge camera. He has designed and manufactured cameras used to record surgery.

Bounds works full time as president of a small Manhattan Beach company, William Bounds, Ltd., currently in production with his latest invention — a combination salt shaker and pepper grinder.

More than a million of the novelty items have been sold.

Since 1966, Bounds has been spending 40 to 50 hours a week in his spare time building the house, assisted at times by hired craftsmen.

His wife, Helen, two sons, Bill Jr., 27, Steve, 22, and daughters, Susan, 25, Sharon, 22, and Jo Ann, 19, have helped in the project.

"It has been a family project since the beginning," Bill Jr. said.

"Dad planned the house for all of us, but we've all been married since the project started. Everything has to be just so. If it isn't, we tear it down and start all over again."

There are roughly 350,000 bricks in floors and walkways in and around the structure, each brick individually sawed to fit patterns Bounds designed.

The inventor expects it will take at least another year to complete the house.

"If I knew it was going to take six years, I would never have begun," he conceded.

"Once started, I was stuck. I couldn't quit. I couldn't let go."

The home is being constructed around a large indoor swimming pool.

There's a bowling alley with automatic pinsetter, a wine cellar, an ice cream parlor and a putting green, all inside the structure.

There are computer-controlled fountains that change color. The library disappears at the touch of a button and a bar appears in its place. There is a steam room and a Japanese bath.

A driveway leads up a steep hill, embracing at the main entrance a large tile and stone pavilion the inventor calls his "theatre in the round."

Priest's Lifetime Hobby

Story of the North

FORT SMITH, N.W.T. (CP)

A valuable collection of northern Canadian artifacts gathered over a number of years by early Oblate missionaries during their travels through the western and the central Arctic, lies in the basement of Grandin College.

The collection of 12,000 items, including the first printing press in the Northwest Territories, may soon be organized into a museum, fulfilling a dream of Brother Henri Sarrault of the Roman Catholic mission here.

Only a small portion of the collection now is on display, in a narrow room of the college where priceless exhibits are jammed side by side. Paintings, skulls and bones of northern wildlife cover the walls.

Realizing the importance and value of the collection, and its contribution to Canadian history, the town council and the mission church are negotiating a proposed joint museum project which would be located on a four-acre setting in the centre of the town-site.

The 12,000 items would go on display in the proposed $300,000 building while larger exhibits, such as the early freight ship, the Radium King, and ancient German tractors used to portage ships.

around the dangerous 16 miles of rapids of the Slave River, would be displayed outside.

Long Beach is everything you used to hear about a Southern California vacation.

And then some.

The Queen Mary's unique. Now open to the public, this famed former luxury liner has become a top tourist attraction. All told the tour goes three decks below the waterline to nine above. She's as long as three football fields and she's higher than Niagara Falls.

It makes sense to spend your winter vacation in Long Beach. A Long Beach vacation is a vacation right on the beach (5.5 miles of clean sand and ocean). The sun shines 300 days out of the year. The golf's great. So's the fishing. In fact the Long Beach off-shore preserves make it a sport fisherman's dream.

Long Beach is in the center of Southern California. It's about 25-30 minutes from all major Southern California attractions—Disneyland and Marineland included. And there's a wide range of family accommodations on or near the beach.

Recycling Helps Redecoration

By DORIS HERZIG
Colonist-Los Angeles Times Service

What are the chimney-flue liners doing in Ellen Liman's bedroom? The same thing the potato-chip cans are doing in her children's rooms and the railroad caboose is doing on the grounds of her home. They've all been recycled, and they're doing decorative duty, that's what.

The chimney-flue liners serve as desk pedestals in Mrs. Liman's summer home in the Hamptons. The potato-chip cans are chandeliers.

The 1915 Long Island railroad caboose has to be the finest noncommuter playhouse her three youngsters (Emily, 8; Lewis, 10; and Douglas, 6) ever romped in.

A graduate of Barnard College and the New York School of Interior Design, Mrs. Liman was an interior decorator before she turned to writing books on economy in decorating. "More and more people are realizing that there isn't as much status in expensive home furnishings these days," she said recently. At a time when blue jeans are upstaging designer fashions, she feels that imagination and daring in converting "found objects" can produce more interesting interiors than a vast outlay of money.

Other Uses

"I think courage will carry you 50 per cent of the way," she said. "There are things all around us that can be recycled into other uses." For her own homes, both her Manhattan apartment and her Long Island summer house, she evidently kept a brave, trained eye open. In a Patchogue motorcycle shop, for example, she found styrofoam packaging material that is now a wall decoration in her summer living room.

Lane Firm

In the beginning, her main motive was economy, and she still stresses that theme in her writing. The Money Saver's Guide To Decorating is the title of her new book. "When I was first married," she said, "My husband was an assistant U.S. attorney and I had very limited funds."

Now her husband, Arthur, is a partner in a New York law firm and economy is often a secondary consideration. When she bought the caboose two years ago, she was well aware that the expense of moving it would be higher than the purchase price of $250. Although it cost about $1,000 to restore and re-roof, "I still ended up with a playhouse that cost much less than a new structure would have been," she said. And, unlike some people who buy a sofa that is too wide to get through the doorway, she chose the little old railroad car partly because it would fit on the narrow road leading to her property.

Mrs. Liman acquired the caboose, which once housed freight-train crews, at auction in Remsburg, N.Y. As a playhouse, it's a natural. It has six bunk beds for climbing over, and the four padded ones, while too hard for today's luxury-prone adults, have not been known to keep any of the children's overnight guests away. In addition, the overhead bar that trainmen grabbed to steady themselves when the car swayed invites all kinds of athletic monkey shins.

Another built-in feature is an attached desk in the front section that also has a black iron coal-stove and sink. Because there is no phone to disturb her, Mrs. Liman sometimes does her writing there.

Bright Colors

She has painted the caboose in bright primary colors — blue, yellow and red — in addition to white. These colors were taken from the pattern of a black background design material bought at a mill-outlet store used for tank covers and a curtain room divider.

With a $20 chrome director's chair, the designer estimates that the interiors, including paint, cost about $50. Instead of curtains, red and blue plastic chairs (ladies' belts costing $1 each) are hung on the windows and the light fixtures are automobile hub caps from a local junk yard.

Similar improvisations are scattered throughout the house. In the master bedroom, the desk is a marble slab propped on two chimney-flue liners. These hollow metal pieces, squarish in shape, cost $3 each in a five-road lumber yard and weren't even refinished, since their surface echoes the terra cotta color of the ceramic floor tiles in the room.

The marble cost $40 but, for a cheaper version, "people can take a piece of plywood and cover it with felt or contact instead of marble," she suggested.

False Ceilings

The potato-chip cans in the children's rooms were turned into chandeliers by adding fringe and fabric paste-cans, matching the bedspreads. In one room, upended soda crates hold toys and other small possessions.

Splashy-patterned bed sheets envelop a small bathroom. They are stapled to walls and from a false ceiling. Because they are already hemmed, sheets are easy to work with, she said. For the shower curtain, she opened up the sides of a linen and had a ready-made channel for the rod. Economy, if not always her motive, is usually the result. "I covered my bathroom with sheeting because it would look nice and it's something I would enjoy doing," she said. Also, it didn't cost much. The six twin-sized, drip-dry sheets were seconds and cost $4 each.

Lawyer Ponders New Title

Miss Justice Wouldn't Work

TORONTO (CP) — Toronto lawyer Mabel Van Camp became the first woman on the Supreme Court of Ontario Wednesday, and on Thursday she sat behind her desk musing as to how she would be addressed in a position that usually takes the title Mr. Justice.

"We were trying out Miss Justice," she said, referring to friends and associates, "but that sounds like injustice."

Miss Van Camp is the second woman in Canada to be appointed to a senior judicial post, the first being Madame Justice Bejjani Laberge-Colas of Quebec Superior Court.

Miss Van Camp, who will wind up her partnership in the family law firm of Beaudoin, Pepper and Van Camp, said she assumes she will be addressed as Madame Justice when she takes on her new duties.

She said that she's feeling nostalgic about having to give up her practice.

"Today I've been sort of looking at my life as it was," she said. "I've always had tremendous security."

The appointment means she will travel considerably each year from county town to county town during the sessions.

Miss Van Camp, 51, a native of Blackstock near Oshawa where she still spends much of her leisure time, is past president of the Women's Law Association of Ontario and the Toronto YWCA.

Of the town of Blackstock, she says, "Only 300 people in it. In a village you can't get lost. Everyone is expected to play a part."

Asked if she thought her appointment to the court was tokenism, she replied there haven't been many women in judicial posts until recently, but then there were few women in the law profession.

When she was called to the bar 30 years ago there were about seven women in the class," she said, but estimated that today there might be as many as 100.

It is still easier for a man to get into a law practice than a woman, she said. "This isn't because the woman won't do as good a job, but it's socially on the golf course, going out to lunch, it's easier to take another man along."

Miss Van Camp regards as false the notion that clients won't go to a woman lawyer.

"Clients never see you as a woman — they want a lawyer and they want a competent lawyer."

Lawyers have had to read extensively and take refresher courses in the last two years, she said. "So many statutes have been written lawyers have had to start almost all over again in their study of law."

"The problems are still the same and we deal with them in much the same way. The law that one applies is different."

Doing The Town

With DOROTHY FRASER

Small gifts with a big impact...

It's really only when Wilson's receive their fall shipment of what we refer to in our own mind as their "small stuff" — unusual articles with modest price tags which make such great little gifts, stockings, etc. — that we begin to feel Christmas is nigh! A lot of such articles arrived at the store last week... and if you want our earnest advice... you'll run, not walk... to Wilson's while the selection is still at its peak! We noticed a number of items which have been here in former years... plus some fascinating new ones... To mention just the latter... there's a wooden (monkey pod?) salted nut container with its own wooden spoon... shaped like a ball on a base, you remove the nuts from a hole in the side... Four matching coasters, usable as individual nut dishes, come with this... We like the gadget for holding your nail polish, equipped with a finger rest to help you do the job neatly... For a friend who has everything... how about the wrought iron napkin holder with a cover to keep the napkins from flying to the four winds when they eat out on the patio? Party Lites are something else we like... And if you have trouble reading the telephone book... the new huckle magnifiers are just the thing! All kinds of great little gifts are on display right now at... W. & J. Wilson Limited, 1221 Government St., 383-7177.

A black velvet evening dress from Valentino has a long jewel-embroidered snake in front, stopping at the décolleté V neckline.

Engrossing reading for young Canadians...

Young Canada Book Week starts this Monday... and the Book Nook is more than ready for it with some brand new books to provide engrossing reading for boys and girls... which we suggest you take note of for Christmas gifting... "River of Stars" by Jean MacKenzie is a B.C. adventure story for children aged 9-13... the tale of a little Indian boy which will fascinate the youngsters... Autographed copies are available... $3.95... A delightful book for 9 to 12-year-olds is "Mary of Mile 18" written and illustrated by a teacher for her pupils... about real people in a real place in the B.C. North Country... Charming water color reproductions... $5.95... Mary Stewart has bypassed the adults this year and her new book... "The Little Broomstick" is written for the 10-14 age group... It's an unusual fantasy full of excitement, fine description and humor... $2.95... Then there's "Joyce Stranger's" "The Honeywell Badger" a nature story for boys and girls from 11 to 14... $5.95... This author is noted for her excellent writing about wild creatures... Last but not least... "The Brown Mouse Book of Alison Uttie" by Katherine Wiglesworth... comprised of two charming stories which have been out of print for many years... Pre-schoolers from 4 to 7 will be enchanted with it! The Book Nook, 10 Centennial Square, 386-0813.

One of Triziani's cocktail party outfits is a smart black and blue checkered silk top over black satin just-above-the-knee pants.

Wall plaques make exciting decorations...

Those clever Danes who make some of the exclusive new stone-ware we told you about recently at Montague Bridgman's have been at it again! Now it's wall plaques... same stone-ware but very heavy... in wonderful colors... imaginative contemporary designs... and a variety of sizes and shapes... There are roosters... a giraffe... a lovely group of birds in earthy brown tones... Leaves and flowers too... like the long, slender daisy plaque which can be hung vertically or horizontally... You can hang these indoors... there's a real trend now to three-dimensional wall decorations... as opposed to two-dimensional pictures... in contemporary homes... They'd be charming for a hall... or a garden wall or patio because being stone-ware, they're impervious to weather... Another exciting use for one of these plaques would be to build it into a fireplace... each plaque has a strong hanger incorporated into the back so there's no problem hanging it up... Really, you might almost call these Danish wall plaques semi-murals... They're quite lovely and truly exciting... conversation pieces for a modern home or garden! Exclusive to... Montague Bridgman Ltd., 811 Government St., 383-0821.

The gold neck chain... never out... is now more popular than ever... very good with sweaters... tailored shirts and dresses.

Get going with a new image...

No matter how happy we women may be with our appearance... every once in a while we get the urge to change things a bit... present a new image to our friends and loved ones (And of course if we're NOT 100% sold on our present looks, this is all the more important!)... What to do about it? Make an appointment at H of G... for a re-styling of your crowning glory! Nothing does the trick better and with such telling effect! So start now getting your hair ready for Christmas... Have one of the new hair styles... hair a little longer... lots of curls and waves... Maybe a new color, too... the reds are the fashionable shades this year... Not for everyone, of course... but let yourself be guided by one of the clever stylists of H of G... artists, every one of them! And while you're about it... have a look at the many beautifying things you can buy as gifts from H of G... Gift certificates make thoughtful... and flatter- ing gifts... They come in denominations of $5 to $25... or more... and can be used for any service given by House of Glamour... as well as for the purchase of wigs, hairpieces, eyelashes, brushes and combs... or any of the exclusive beauty products H of G sells... House of Glamour, 1175 Douglas St., 386-6188.

Just below the knee is the most popular boot length this season.

Creative fabrics for creative people...

There's a tremendous boom in home sewing these days... as so many women are discovering that not only can they be better dressed, for less money, when they make their own clothes... but that they can be truly and satisfyingly creative in the process! Naturally, one needs stimulus to inspire creation... something to set off the spark... and that's where we think Saba's fabric department comes in... Inspiring creative fashion ideas at Saba's are the most beautiful, elegant fabrics you've ever laid eyes on... We're thinking now of the glamour fabrics we saw this week... the opulent sheers and lame jerseys sparkling with gold or silver lurex thread... supple and gossamer in texture for that shimmering, soft... floating "freedom" look we want on our party clothes! There are plains, abstracts and floral prints... in heavenly colors... which those knowledgeable people at Saba's show you how to combine for stunning effects... These imported lame knits are 40 to 45" wide, and prices start at around $4 yard... They're all beautifully co-ordinated... waiting for you to make up into dresses or jumpsuits... long skirts and blouses... festive outfits of all kinds for the holiday season... So be creative... go seek inspiration at... Saba's, 1130 Douglas St., 384-0561.

Fashion forecast for the year 2000: a phosphorescent garment worn over nothing but a pair of flesh-toned bikini pants.

Every woman loves nice accessories...

Usually we're concentrating on fashions and millinery when we visit Miss Frith... but this last time we cast a practised eye over their well-chosen selection of accessories of all kinds... with a view to giving you some good ideas for gifts... No matter how much... or how little... you're prepared to spend, you'll find something at Miss Frith's to delight the feminine heart! Take handbags, for instance... there's a big assortment of colors and styles... some real nifty ones with the set look and the look of leather priced from around $5 to $15... Glamorous evening and cocktail purses... Gloves in leather, nylon, kid, kidtex... plus glittery gloves for festive occasions... Gossamer, sheer, sparkly lace gloves from France... as well as scarves and other trappings... as colorful as they are delightful! New are the Pretty Polly pantyhose gift packs... each containing two pairs of these long-lasting pantyhose along with gift wrapping paper and cards to do them up in... Only $2.50 for these packs! And there are umbrellas galore... including folding umbrellas which really work without any nonsense... The new transparent "bird cage" which you get right in to, so to speak! Plenty of sexy loungewear... Lansea turtle-neck pullovers and cardigans in fine, lightweight wool... You name it, Miss Frith's has it! So shop early at... Miss Frith's Fashions, 1619 Douglas St., 383-7181.

N.Y. fashion preview: Spring dresses will expose the shoulders and back.

Fine furniture at worthwhile savings...

Somewhere other than the Gallery... home of timeless beautiful traditional furniture... got over-stocked! Just not enough room to contain the many fine imported pieces from England and elsewhere... So-o-o... they're having one of their very rare sales... And how very opportune the timing is for people who'd like to acquire a piece or two of new furniture for Christmas! We did some browsing of our own on Thursday... Absolutely everything in the store has been marked down... Price tags... never overly high for such fine quality furniture... have been quite ruthlessly slashed! For instance... For a charming little wine table with leather top... just right for holding glass and ashtray... for a mere $32!... Nests of tables with leather and glass tops... in mahogany or walnut are as low as $79... and oak nests at $45... There are grandfathers' and grandmothers' clocks... Ladies' and gentlemen's chairs with rich velvet covers... Lovely little secretaire desks... fine oak furniture from England... hand-carved reproductions of real old pieces... All sorts of other pieces we haven't room to mention... And if you've had any fears about the Gallery being expensive... go and see how wrong you were! The Gallery Division of Home Furniture Co., 825 Port St., 382-0138.

Common Room

Step Up, Says Faculty

OCRA COKE, N.C. (AP) — Residents of isolated Ocracoke Island see their new one-room school as a step into modern education, not a step backwards in time.

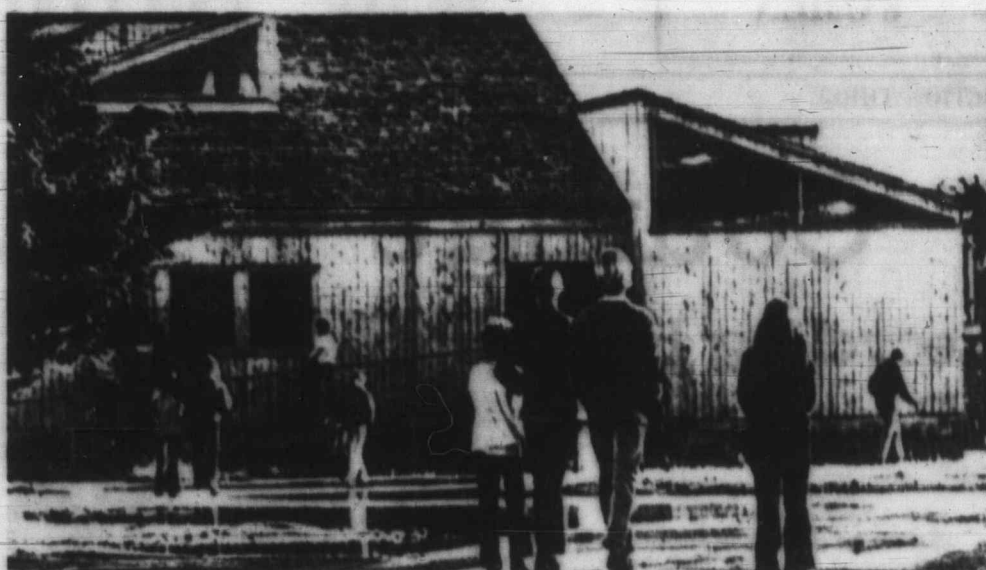

All of the island's 68 school-age youngsters attend Grade 1 through 12 in the new $100,000 juniper wood structure. The building has a central, common-room and alcoves on four sides.

The faculty of five, including principal John Tucker, thinks its upgraded concept is an indication of progress. Until last spring Ocracoke youngsters went to a five-room frame school. There was one teacher for each three grades.

Now the 27 pupils in the first seven grades are in one area with two teachers, while the older youths are taught in two groups by three teachers.

In the new school, one large room in the centre is the library. Around it are the classrooms. Students are free to move from the general room to the others to study, use audiovisual aids and the like, Tucker said.

One-Parent Family Report:

Day Care, Low Rent Lacking

OTTAWA (CP) — A new study of one-parent families in Canada reveals much-needed services such as day care and low-cost housing are sadly lacking, Reuben Baetz, Canadian Council on Social Development executive director, said.

The study based on 1971 interviews with 113 heads of single-parent families and 44 agencies serving them, concludes social stigma is a major difficulty for these families.

People expect them to be problems, says Lillian Thomson of Owen Sound, Ont., a former council staff member. In her report she says Canadians should "lay aside their stereotypes" and recognize the existing variety of one-parent families.

"The general public has not grasped the fact that this group constitutes between 8 and 9 per cent of all families," she said. In 1966, there were more than 372,000 one-parent families out of 4.5 million Canadian families.

Marked by the report, co-sponsored by the council and several single-parents associations and financed by the federal health department, was carried out in the Halifax-Dartmouth area of Nova Scotia, Hull, Que., London, Ont., Winnipeg and Vancouver.

It recommends the study of a guaranteed annual income for every Canadian and suggests that one-parent families headed by women would be an appropriate group on which to try an experimental program.

Nearly 16 per cent of the families interviewed were living in subsidized public housing in large or medium-sized cities. But some young mothers were paying $90 a month for "stretched" slum housing that does not have laundry facilities and is, frequently, verminous.

Community groups should press the government for more low-cost housing, the report said. And day care should be available to all families.

Comments by solo-support mothers and community leaders created "a vivid impression of family courts that are overwhelmed by the pressure of applications from people who are in desperate situations."

Most mothers said that they were failing to obtain dependable financial settlements with absent fathers through the family courts, although in some instances they did not know whether their husbands were paying or defaulting because payments were made through courts to provincial assistance programs.

The report says more attention should be given to the children's welfare when awarding custody of children to separated parents. Rates of social assistance should be reviewed continually and related to nutrition standards and cost-of-living levels.

Women who were sole parents should be free to choose between remaining at home on social assistance and taking jobs. In either case, they should be able to receive help from community services.

Battle Won—War Lost?

MONTREAL (CP) — Having won the battle for equal drinking rights, Quebec women may be wondering what happened to their victory spoils.

The national assembly passed a bill last summer allowing tavern-keepers to open their doors to female customers.

Previously, women were limited to drinking in bars and nightclubs or in licensed restaurants.

Despite the new law, virtually none of the 500 taverns in the city have shown interest in admitting women, and there have been less than a handful of applicants for the new sub-category licence.

Paul-Emile Landry, secretary of the Montreal Tavern-keepers' association, said Thursday most male patrons prefer the current setup.

He said tavern-keepers feel the expense of installing ladies' washrooms and changing the decor of their establishments would not be justified by increased business.

One man who differs with the majority is Bernard Janelle, proprietor of Le Gobelet, a Montreal tavern, which was destroyed by fire last January and is being reconstructed.

Women will be welcomed when Le Gobelet reopens as a pub in the city's north end later this month, says Janelle.

The pub is being decorated with early French-Canadian antiques and the interior woodwork is being constructed from panels taken from two dismantled barns.

"We may be breaking new ground in catering to women, but it is a sure thing that a new trend will develop from our lead," Janelle said.

"Travel has broadened the outlook of Quebecers who have come to appreciate the European life-style. Immigrants also have influenced our drinking habits."

Shows Not for Family

Contemporary Needs Home

where are you going this Fall after you've been to the

UNICORN
Where Fashion Comes First
655 VIEW ST. 385-3114

Contemporary theatre in Victoria is an idea in need of a home, says Bastion Theatre's Colin Gorrie.

It needs a large home, too, about 10,000 square feet, preferably in the old town.

SUBURBAN

area says Gorrie, the artistic director who came to Bastion on a Canada Council grant.

Victorians, says Gorrie, are ready for the avant garde, as witness the successful run recently of Marat Sade.

But he doesn't think modern offerings should be mixed up with Bastion Theatre's regular adult and children's seasons.

"We need a large hall where we could put the entire Bastion operation under one roof, with just the McPherson seasons going outside," said Gorrie.

At present, he said, there is a workshop in Esquimalt, costumes are out in Oak Bay, and the office is in Bastion Square.

If the operation could be brought together in some kind of an unused warehouse type of place, then part of the area could be used for a Studio Theatre.

Gorrie said he already has a Studio Theatre group together, and at present they are having training sessions. By the new year they should be ready to pick a play for rehearsal, and put on a production in the spring.

"We really would like to get a place by New Year's so that we can have it ready for spring," he said.

Gorrie said the Studio Theatre will complement rather than compete with the regular adult and children's seasons at the McPherson.

"We shall be catering generally to a different theatre-going audience than the McPherson seasons," he said.

Gorrie said he rather envied the movies which can advertise a show complete with censor's warning if necessary.

"That way people know before they go to a show what to expect."

"We want to keep our contemporary offerings separate so people will know that they shouldn't expect traditional theatre."

Gorrie said he would like to produce some classical plays, but in a contemporary manner and setting.

"One thing you can't do is to produce a theatre season such as we do at the McPherson with something for everyone."

"We can't expect to cater to the avant garde set during the regular season, nor can we expect the regular Bastion Theatre audience to appreciate the kind of theatre that would be appreciated by those people."

"We should cater to both in different settings, and we should remember in our planning that this is a university town."

Delivery Talk Paid Off

CLEVELAND (AP) — Mrs. Frank Martin has delivered her first baby and drew on practical experience while doing so — she got her basic knowledge from watching a television talk show.

"Gee, I've always wanted to deliver a baby," Mrs. Martin told her husband as they watched the Dick Cavett show and listened to true or false questions about delivering a baby.

She got her chance at 1 a.m. the next morning when neighbor Robert Walsh hurried over to the Martin home to report his wife Terry, who has gone through false labor three times, really meant it this time.

While Walsh called for a doctor and an ambulance, Linda Martin handled the delivery—consulting through with the help of the TV adviser—and now mother and daughter are doing fine.

What did Mrs. Martin learn from the talk show?

"They said not to tap the baby on the bottom to make it cry but turn it on its side and tap it," she said.

Ann Landers

Dear Ann Landers: Since you often take up the cudgel for so many segments of society who have a hard time getting their story before the public, I wonder if you could consider helping a minority group that has no organized voice—refer to the folks who must spend the rest of their lives in wheelchairs.

There are so many places we can't go because the doorframes are too narrow to accommodate a wheelchair, especially the door to the bathroom. We who are members of the wheelchair brigade know the theatres, restaurants, stores, meeting places and yes, even private homes, which must be avoided for this reason. I have a wonderful husband who can lift me from my chair and carry me through a door, but he cannot go into a ladies restroom.

Will you, print this letter, please? Perhaps some business establishments who are planning on remodeling or rebuilding will see it and heed. Also, architects and home builders could profit from this information. My thanks and best wishes from thousands who are rolling along.

Dear Thousands: Here's an amazing how little thought was given to people in wheelchairs until Franklin D. Roosevelt became President. Many buildings installed ramps and widened doorways for the Chief. I hope your letter will serve as a reminder that the wheelchair population should not be forgotten.

Dear Ann Landers: We have a 16-year-old son who is unusually good looking, but he seems much more interested in sports than girls.

A few girls have been telephoning Chuck lately and I have overheard some of his conversations. He is courteous but not especially interested in any of them.

Yesterday I was cleaning Chuck's room and I ran into a letter from "Mitzi." So far as I could tell it must have been a note he received in school because I see all the mail that comes into the house and Chuck has not received any letters I didn't know about. Well, Ann, that letter was so brazen and full of sexy suggestions that I just couldn't believe it. She came right out and offered herself.

I know who the girl is and I also know her parents. Do you feel I should show this letter to them? Should I say something to Chuck? My husband says he would trust your judgment. Concerned in L.A.

Dear C: Do not call the girl's parents. Do not mention this to your son. And stop snooping around in his desk and "overhearing" his telephone conversations. Chuckie sounds like a fairly solid, well-behaved kid. If he gets the idea that you are trying to "protect" him against girls he might decide to give you something to worry about.

Doctors Link Heart, Face

ANAHEIM, Calif. (UPI) — Children with a certain type of heart defect may also have a rare heart defect, two Canadian researchers have reported.

They examined 13 children between the ages of two weeks and 8 years who had both the characteristic "peculiar facial appearance" and the heart defect, they told the 44th annual scientific session of the American Heart Association.

Dr. Nigel Roberts and Dr. C. A. F. Mose of Toronto said the children all had a form of "supravalvular pulmonary stenosis," a narrowing of the artery that carries blood from the heart to the lungs.

They all had "flattened nasal bridges, elongated upper lips, low set ears and an abnormally wide face between the eyes, a condition known as hyper telorism," the doctors said.

Some also had a small receding jaw, three were mentally retarded, nine were physically underdeveloped, and five had other heart defects, they said.

Some Like It Hot

Not everyone likes to keep cool head, and when winter starts nipping around corners, ideas for warmer heads prevail, as wide-eyed models in Victoria department store demonstrate. Eighteen-year-old Susan Taylor of 1640 Morningside Place, Gordon Head, shows she's caught on to idea.

Wig Salesmen In Board's Hair

FRANKFORT, Ky. (AP) — Careless wig sellers are getting in the hair of the state board of hairdressers and cosmetologists. It has delivered notices around the state that store employees handling wigs will have to be licensed.

Time. It hangs heavy for the bored, eludes the busy, flies by for the young and runs out for the aged.

We talk about it like it's a manufactured commodity that some can afford, others can't; some can reproduce, others waste.

We crave it. We curse it. We kill it. We abuse it. Is it a friend? Or an enemy? I suspect we know very little about it. To know it at all, and its potential, perhaps we should view it through a child's eyes.

"When I was young Daddy was going to throw me up in the air and catch me and I would giggle until I couldn't giggle anymore, but he had to change the furnace filter, and there wasn't time."

"When I was young, Mama was going to read me a story and I was going to turn the pages and pretend I could read."

"When I was older Daddy and I were going fishing one weekend, just the two of us and we were going to pitch a tent and fry fish with the heads on them like they do in the flashlight ads, but at the last minute he had to fertilize the grass and there wasn't time."

"When I was older, the whole family was always going to pose together for our Christmas card, but my brother had bad practice, my sister had her hair up, Dad was watching the Colts and Mom had to 'wash' the bathroom. There wasn't time."

"When I grew up and left home to be married, I was going to sit down with Mom and Dad and tell them I loved them and I would miss them. But Hank (he's my best man and a real clown) was honking the horn in front of the house, so there wasn't time."

Women Demand Convention Dues

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Unless more than half the delegates to the Republican and Democratic national conventions in 1972 are women, there will be "serious credentials challenges," the National Women's Political Caucus has warned.

Officials of the caucus said the conventions should send only delegations that fairly reflect the populations of the states they represent, and men constitute a population majority in only four states — Alaska, Hawaii, Nevada and Wyoming.

"Failure to ensure reasonable representation will undoubtedly result in serious credentials challenges by women's groups in various states," the caucus said.

Province's Probe Into Scientology

Doesn't Turn Up Health Interference

By JOHN MATTERS
Columnist Reporter

The B.C. government has made an informal investigation of scientology, a religious cult operating in the province that has been banned elsewhere.

The findings of B.C. authorities contrast with those of a government inquiry in Australia in 1965 that described scientology as "evil, fantastic and impossible, its principles perverted and ill-founded, its techniques debased and harmful."

The United Kingdom government in 1968 imposed a ban on all students entering that country to study scientology, which has its head office in London.

Last August, a U.S. federal court judge in Washington, D.C., ruling on an eight-year-old case in district courts, said one of the cult's claims "was and is false — in short, a fraud."

Health Minister Ralph Loffmark says his department has looked into scientology, now operating in Vancouver, to ascertain whether it interfered with a person's inclination to seek orthodox medical advice, particularly mental health services.

No such interference has been found but the health department continues to keep scientology under observation.

"It (scientology) seems to have fallen into general disuse," said a health department spokesman.

However, the experience of Ontario also contrasts with that of B.C.

The report of the Ontario Committee into the Healing Arts, a Royal commission type of investigation of all facets of medical care, last year suggested that the provincial health minister there keep "close and continuing scrutiny" of scientology.

The committee noted that the cult refused to provide information on its activities on the grounds that it was a religious institution.

In 1969, the scientologists running the Vancouver office claimed they were being harassed by RCMP, who had "invaded the sanctity" of their church.

A spokesman for B.C. Attorney-General Leslie Peterson at that time denied any persecution by the government or the RCMP but the spokesman confirmed that the department was reacting to complaints.

In any case, the scientology centre in Vancouver flourishes today and one of its newest programs involves dealing with teenagers who have or are using drugs. The scientologists put them on what is called a "communications" course.

In 1968, Time magazine reported that while the introduce-religious philosophy" that would retain most of the features of dianetics.

Those seeking spiritual release go through five levels of liberation. In addition to lectures on the theories of scientology, initiates answer a series of questions, often highly personal, while clutching two tin cans wired to an "E-meter."

Some articles on scientology state that Hubbard demonstrates the E-meter by applying it to tomatoes; others say the tomato is used to establish the gadget's baseline.

In any case, by watching fluctuations of a needle, scientology "auditors" allegedly can discern when a student has become "clear" and has attained "total awareness and freedom."

One person who has been through it all is Dinah Christie, who was featured on the now-defunct television show "This Hour Has Seven Days."

"As far as I'm concerned, it's done me nothing but good," she told Weekend magazine in 1969. "I've been into Zen and many other things but this is the first time I've had anything really tangible to show for it."

"It's helped me both professionally and personally. I see scientology as a movement which enables people to drag out the garbage they have accumulated in life and throw it away. It's really a 'groovy' thing."

However, the New York Times of Nov. 13, 1969, reported how the church of scientology tried to take over Britain's National Association for Mental Health, a respected voluntary association that disseminates information about mental illness and strives to improve treatment facilities.

The scientologists apparently tried to "pack" the slate of candidates for offices.

That case followed an effort by unknown persons to undermine the annual conference of the World Federation for Mental Health in Washington, D.C. Fraudulent circulars had been sent to a large number of members saying the meeting had been called off.

tory lesson is only $15, it can cost as much as $5,000 to complete the scientology course. Time also noted that the cult "seems to have a strong appeal for hippies."

Scientologists in Vancouver confirm that a number of young persons from Victoria attend its church there two or three times a week. In addition to the cost of the courses, there is a substantial travel expense involved.

Scientology was founded by L. Ronald Hubbard, a former science fiction writer. The religion first surfaced as "dianetics," a fad that flourished in the U.S. in the early 1950s.

Dianetics purported to be a quick way to mental health that could clear the mind of "engrams," the mental quirks that, Hubbard alleged, were the cause of all psychic problems.

Psychiatrists and psychologists then condemned dianetics as meddling with potentially dangerous mental problems.

However, Hubbard was undismayed and in 1952 announced the founding of the Church of Scientology, which, he said, would be an "applied

Probe Into Death To Be Held Today

A post-mortem is expected to be held today to determine the cause of death of a 66-year-old Sidney man who died early Saturday in St. Joseph's Hospital.

The man, Archibald Davies, of 5985 Fifth Street, had been involved in a car accident at noon last Friday, but it is believed death may have been due to natural causes.

Davies had been in critical condition since the accident, which police believe may have followed suffered a heart attack or other form of natural illness.

Davies died about 6:45 a.m. Saturday, about 19 hours after the accident when a car he was driving went out of control on Herald near Blanshard.

The car crossed Blanshard, mounted a traffic island in mid-street, crossed north-bound lanes, went over a curb and finally hit the Morris Printing Building at 1745 Blanshard.

Davies' wife Luch, also 66, was said to be in good condition in St. Joseph's with facial injuries.

Mrs. Evelyn Donaldson, of 610 Dallas, was treated for minor injuries she received when the car hit the building where she was working.

Coroner Edmond Jorje de St. Jorje will not decide whether an accident or an inquiry will be held until the cause of death has been determined.

Stolen Bonds Recovered

MONTREAL (CP) — An anonymous telephone call led two detectives to a suitcase in a suburban Dorval shopping centre and recovery of $240,000 in negotiable bonds stolen from a Montreal International Airport hangar. The bonds, part of the March 11 robbery of $520,000 at the Air Canada hangar, were destined for the Royal Bank of Canada.

CHECKMATE

Every move has to be marked

By RAY KERR
Colonist Staff

Reading the score of a chess game is not as difficult as it may appear.

Since I've had a number of enquiries on the subject — from people not quite certain about the method — here are a few pointers to make it easy even for beginners.

Since white always moves first, his moves are listed first with black's replies next.

The first number indicates the move's number, followed by the initial of the individual piece's name. The dash indicates the piece is moving to a new position and is followed by the new position's name.

So 1. P-K4 means white's first move was moving the pawn to King 4 square, and 1. P-K4, P-K4 means white's first move was met by black moving his king's pawn to King 4 square.

These names are constant, even though the King or Bishop or whatever the case may be may have moved from the starting position. The depth of the board is counted in ranks, from one to eight.

Looking at the same P-K4 move, one reads it as a Pawn moving on the King file to the fourth rank, or four squares deep from the King's starting position. As it is understood that only one Pawn is capable of moving to the King 4 position, it is not necessary from where the Pawn is moving.

However, when two or more pieces are capable of reaching the new position, the correct piece is identified by either the rank number of its old position or the name of its starting position.

For instance, if two knights were capable of reaching the position QN3 (Queen Bishop 3), the correct knight would be indicated by either its starting position (QN) if it is still there, or by a rank number (say, N5-QN3). If both knights are on the same rank, they would be identified as being either Queen-side Knight or King-side Knight (QN or KN).

One important point to keep in mind is to make sure to count the ranks from the correct end of the board.

For example, White's QR4 position actually is Black's QR5.

Another reminder — Always indicates that a piece has been captured, such as Pxp, meaning Pawn takes Pawn. Furthermore, O-O indicates Kingside castling while O-O-O shows Queenside castling. And finally, ch as in N-Bch indicated a check — a challenge to the King. Good luck ... and I don't know the initials for that one.

Games of the week feature a fine win by world champion Boris Spassky of the Soviet Union over Surrey's Bob Zuk (Canadian Open), and another excellent Bobby Fischer game from a recent rapid tourney at Manhattan Chess Club, New York, against Paul Brandts of Chicago.

Arts Team Needs Civic Bat

Gilchrist in play

The suggestion that artistic endeavors should pay for themselves would be funny if it didn't come from Victoria's Courtney Gilchrist.

His latest flurry was directed at the Victoria Conservatory of Music but it is typical of the mayor's attitude. In all fairness to Haddock it should be remembered that his view is shared by most councils and aldermen.

Haddock's suggestion sits well with other 18th-century minds but it really is quite ridiculous. He might as well ask why we don't just live on Park on a cash basis. I almost regret having said that for he might go ahead and just do that.

There is also the old canard that somehow or other there is a great free enterprise system at work in the world of business that is lacking in the area of the arts.

This is rubbish. The arts need help and financial protection because of the market they operate in just as much as some Canadian goods need tariffs to protect them from the free enterprise of the great big world outside.

It is only necessary to look at what happened with the chamber of commerce booklet advertising Victoria to see what happens when real private enterprise gets to work. In that case an American company was given the job of publishing a book about the city and its businesses and a number of local firms cried.

It would have been great to have given the local firms a chance to publish the book just as it is great to give local artists a hand to get their work painted, published, performed or exhibited.

The art gallery and the symphony struggle along on civic grants that would be the laughing stock of any European city the size of Victoria. Add this to the fact that Victoria is the provincial capital. The conservatory is a thoroughly worthwhile enterprise.

Most civic politicians never miss a chance to get their pictures taken with a child who has been selected for national honors as a musician or artist. But they are too often not willing to go to bat to make funds available for musicians and artists.

The UVic theatre department opens a production of The Ecstasy of Rita Joe at the Phoenix Theatre on Thursday at 8 p.m. The show will go for 10 nights including Sunday.

The play is a strong story of the persecution of Indians by white men and George Ryga, a British Columbian, has pulled no punches. In this play, Rick Gilchrist plays Jamie Paul.

Settings for the play are by Milton Wright who is a theatre student at UVic.

The Association of Canadian Television and Radio Artists, the performers union, has sounded off on the question of Canadian content in live theatre and has suggested in a brief to the Canada Council that playwrights getting council help should be forced to include 50 per cent Canadian content.

Settings for the play are by Milton Wright who is a theatre student at UVic.

The usual suppositions are trotted forth and the usual reasons are given for the quota system.

Even after reading the lengthy brief I can't be convinced that if Canadian plays are good they won't come to the top.

To suggest that Canadian theatres are dominated by British and American plays because of a form of colonialism is rubbish.

If anyone writes a commercial play that is going to make money for the producer then it will get on the boards. It will score in New York and in London just as well as Dawson Creek. If a Canadian play has the magic ingredients necessary then nothing will stop it. In just the same way no amount of cultural protectionism will do any good.

It would really be better all around if our playwrights got on with the job of writing good plays.

The Quebec-based theatre company Le Theatre des Plein-ventils (Dandelion Theatre) will offer a children's theatre production Asteroid B-612 Thursday at the Cultural Centre, 307 Richmond, starting at 6:30 p.m.

Asteroid B-612 is a fantasy concerning a professor who discovers a serum capable of transporting grapefruit to another planet inhabited by a prince and a rose.

The play in French has been seen by 100,000 children Quebec during a tour that covered 60 communities.

Madman Fits Mold Elton John Struck

By KING LEE

Colonist Staff

Elton John, who had a meteoric rise in the rock music scene about a year ago and hasn't been heard from for the last while, has made a reappearance with his new album, Madman.

The English singer-songwriter-pianist once again teams up strongly with writer Bernie Taupin to present a great set which fits the mold of his Elton John album, that is, heavily orchestrated and exceptionally smooth.

Madman is the opposite of his rather 19th-century, U.S.-West quality of the Tumbleweed Connection album which was such a smash.

John and Taupin have been described as two of the most important figures in contemporary music. This latest effort confirms that belief.

LPs: Van Morrison's Tupelo Honey combines this singer's blues and jazz styling very well. Wild Night, When That Evening Sun Goes Down, Old, Old Woodstock, Moonshine Whiskey and Tupelo Honey are good ones.

The Great Blind Degree is Richie Havens' latest offering and it's not too bad. Tommy, from the Who's rock opera, Fire and Rain, Teach Your Children and What About Me are the exceptional numbers here.

Gayle McCormick does the soul trip well despite being white. It's a Crying Shame, her hit single—Natural Woman, Superstar, Rescue Me and Save Me deserve play.

UN Visits

Peking Group Thanks Sponsors

NEW YORK (UPI) — The new Chinese delegation shored up its position Saturday with the bloc that ended its 22-year wait for entry into the United Nations, and its leaders prepared credentials for formal presentation to ailing Secretary General U Thant in the hospital.

A spokesman said high-ranking members were on a round of visits to the missions of all 23 countries sponsoring the UN resolution that ousted Nationalist China and gave the China seat to Peking.

The delegation head, Chiao Kuan-hua, opened the day with a visit of nearly two hours with the delegates from Pakistan. He or others already had paid respects to the missions of Albania, Romania, Nepal, Tanzania, Algeria, Yugoslavia, Cuba, Burma, and Iraq, and the visits continued throughout Saturday.

"He's a friendly, amiable man," said Chiao's chauffeur, Edward Whitman. "I haven't seen one frown on him since I started."

Chiao, who is vice-minister of foreign affairs of the People's Republic of China, and Huang Hua, deputy head of the delegation and China's permanent UN representative, will call on Thant today for the half-minute ceremony presenting Huang's credentials.

The secretary general is recovering from a bleeding peptic ulcer. He had not been permitted to receive visitors this week. The main body of the Chinese delegation arrived here Thursday in response to the Oct. 25 vote admitting Communist China.

Kao Liang, who headed the advance party preparing the way for the delegation and is its temporary press spokesman, said there were no plans for Saturday night. "You rest completely on Saturday night."

However, there were reports that the delegates were spending a good deal of time boning up on the proceedings of the current General Assembly session. Two delegation members were seen leaving the UN documentation section Friday with a pile of informative papers.

THE MEMORIAL SOCIETY OF B.C. IS A NON-PROFIT ORGANIZATION

Incorporated under the Societies Act in 1956, the Society now has over 50,000 members. 1,000 to 1,500 are joining from all over B.C. every month.

THE SOCIETY STANDS FOR:

- Simple, low-cost funeral services;
- No make-up, embalming or similar mutilation of the body;
- Encouragement of memorial-type services, without the body present, reflecting on the life rather than on the death of the deceased;
- Above all, dignity and respect for the dead.

Last year the Society's undertaker-performed 2018 services for members, at an average all-inclusive cost of $229.83.

If the high cost of doing attends you, if you don't want your relatives to be kept with excessive life saving, hundreds too much for your funeral, relieve them of this stressful decision. As a Society member you will receive funeral plans which allow you to record your own wishes to the privacy of your home now, and file them with us for permanent reference.

Lizzie Soaked?

BUSY LIZZIE (E.J. Sanichon)

Ordinarily, impatient Lizzie is an unusually easy-going and trouble-free houseplant, and gets its nickname from the fact that it keeps on blooming busily over most of the year. In your case, where the flower buds drop off before they open, the most common cause is unavailability at the roots.

This poor root action could be due to too much or too little water, unconfined soil, exhausted soil, overdose of fertilizer or too small a pot. If you have not much experience with houseplants, my guess is over-watering. Feel the soil surface daily with the fingertips, but wait until it becomes definitely dry to the touch before giving more water. Never allow the drainage water to stand in the saucer.

GOOSEBERRY TREE (S.M. Victoria)

Gooseberries in standard or tree form, as advertised by some U.S. and German nurseries, are produced in very much the same way as standard or tree roses. The stock used is usually Rites aureum, the Golden Currant.

While this yellow-flowered ornamental currant can be raised quite easily by cuttings, there is a tendency for the stems to develop a king, making a crooked "trunk" and an unsightly gooseberry tree. A better plan is to detach suckers rather than using slips, as these make much straighter stems.

When the current stem reaches the desired height, it is either budded in June or grafted in January or February with the desired variety of gooseberry, usually with one of the large-fruited English dessert varieties.

RABBITS vs PANSIES (A.G. Maple Bay)

It is unfortunately true that Bugs Bunny seems to be even fonder of pansy foliage than he is of carrots. There are several very good repellents on the market under such brand names as Bunny Bar, No-Bit, ZIP and Shoo!, and I suggest one of these be applied to the plants either as a spray or with a watering can.

These preparations are formulated principally for painting or spraying the bark of young trees and shrubs to keep them from being gnawed by field mice and rabbits, but I see no reason why one of them shouldn't be used on pansies. They are not poisonous, do not cause pollution, do no harm to plants and are even harmless to the mice and rabbits. They work by virtue of the extremely bitter taste they impart.

In the old days a similar bitter-tasting spray was made by simmering quassia chips in water, but it washed off in the rain and was nothing like as long-lasting as the modern repellents based on the chemical thiram.

CLIMBING OPHELIA (A.O.M., Nanaimo)

As you have discovered, this rose has a tendency to produce all its blooms on the uppermost part of the plant, leaving the lower portions of the wall or trellis unfurnished with flowers. I am afraid, though, that you may have done your rose a bit of no good by cutting it back so hard, as such drastic pruning will often cause a Climbing Ophelia to revert to bush form and lose its climbing habit.

Rather than drastic pruning, the best way to win a reluctant climbing rose is to train all growths as close to the horizontal as possible, or to arch the canes with the tips of each shoot slightly lower than its base — a form of training known in France as l'arcure. This concentrates the sap in the middle section of the shoot, making for a better distribution of the flowers.

What the Butler Saw

The story concerning Aristotle Onassis' 170-clause marriage contract with the former Jacqueline Kennedy, as described by Onassis' chief steward, and denied by Mrs. Onassis' secretary, points up the hazard that only the rich must deal with. And that is:

"How does one find a faithful butler who has no desire to write his memoirs?"

By accident I happened to be in the office of a literary agent the other day, and his phone didn't stop ringing.

This is some of what I heard.

"Hello, yes, Jim, I was going to call you this morning. No, I couldn't find anyone else on the Onassis yacht who had anything to add to the chief steward's memoirs, but would you be interested in a book written by Elizabeth Taylor's former hairdresser?"

"It's got some very juicy chapters in it. He was present when Liz cut Richard Burton's

The agent hung up and the phone rang again. "Double-day? George, thanks for returning my call. Remember the gardener I told you about who worked for Frank Sinatra? Yeh, the guy who was fired when they found him in a tree at midnight looking into Sinatra's bedroom."

"Well, he's just written a book titled A Tree Grows at Midnight. It's told from the viewpoint of an outsider looking in on a world people rarely get to see. We're asking $100,000 advance. Okay, but give me your answer in 24 hours."

"And I have a ghost writer working with Henry Ford's ex-chauffeur on a book titled What Christina Ford did to Henry Ford when he got a better idea."

"That should sell. You seem to have a market for the ex-employees of very rich people," I said.

"We have a saying in the publishing business: In every ex-butler there's a memoir screaming to get out."

The phone rang again. "Hello, ah yes, Mr. McMurtry at the Souffle Chef Employment Agency told me you would call. You worked for Ethel Kennedy as a cook? How long? Three weeks? That's marvelous. What have you got? She served red wine with fish at a dinner she gave for Andy Williams? How soon can you get over here? Good, and don't talk to anybody about this."

"I guess there's a lot of money in being a servant

these days," I said.

"If you work for the right person at the right time, there is a fortune to be made. I just sold Putnam the biography of the man who used to clean Bebe Rebozo's swimming pool. It's titled Backwash at Key Biscayne."

"I'd buy that."

"I also have a deal cooking with one of ex-president Johnson's ranch hands who kept a diary of what happened during the opening of the Johnson Library in Austin."

"Juicy?"

"It's going to shake up a lot of librarians."

The phone rang again. "Hello, yeh, yeh. You were? Can you prove it? And you're willing to talk about it? ... You bet I'm interested. I'll see you at five."

"Who was that?" I asked.

"It's the gal who used to work for Martha Mitchell's answering service."

Old Ways Preferred

Jimmy Stewart likes the old ways better, particularly when it comes to movie censorship. "I don't see anything wrong with being told what we can and what we can't do, just as long as it's reasonable," says the filmland oldtimer. He looks back with longing upon the motion picture code as it was once administered by the Breen office and says, "If you showed two people in bed together, for instance, each party had to have one foot on the floor, but that didn't seem to hurt the pictures any."

As far as today's films, with all those bodies right there smack in the middle of the bed, well, Jim would do away with those easily enough. He said he would actually welcome "reasonable censorship" from the outside if the industry won't police itself. As for the current film rating system, "It has turned out to be an apparatus for making deals as to how many objectionable words you can say, or if you take an 'X' movie have been tagged by the public as a pornographic stage medium, parents won't let their children go to see them. And it's high time something was done about that."

Actress Billie Whitelaw, one of the leads in Universal's Frenzy, was in no hurry to get married. She and Robert Muller became proud parents four years ago, and only last month they decided to legalize it all. The ceremony, Billie sends me words from Blighly, was quiet and small. They saw no point in making a big fuss out of the occasion.

Now CBS brass have extended their Merv Griffin replacement search to Ray Ballard, and wouldn't the Women Libers cheer if a comedienne got that coveted talk show spot?

Author Irving Wallace told me he had good reason to use the St. Francis as the setting for a chapter in his upcoming The Word novel. He's made 16 Atlantic crossings on that luxury liner, known from memory each nook and cranny passage-way.

Buddy Greco's got his New Year's Eve planned. He'll be singing for the celebration crowd in Honolulu. Before that date, Buddy hopes Aaron Spelling will page him to ABC for a Movie of the Week in which "El Greco" would play a singer who kills a director when told he's losing his voice.

Man's unique agony as a species consists in his perpetual conflict between the desire to stand out and the need to blend in.

It's almost unbelievable that one out of every three "housing starts" last year in the U.S. was a mobile home; through greed and stubbornness, the housing industry is changing the whole demographic structure of that country, and for the worse.

The poor and uneducated scorn and laugh at things that are foreign, while the rich and educated prize and praise them — but both are committing the same folly, that of judging a thing by its extrinsic worth instead of by its intrinsic worth.

Order that has to be maintained through force is doomed to ultimate defeat; only order obtained by consensus has survival value.

Every idea, no matter how good, that exists in isolation is a dangerous error.

The person who says "All moral laws are absolute" fails to understand the human predicament, but the person who says "All moral laws are relative" fails to understand the responsibility placed upon us by the human predicament.

It's odd that so many of the same people who are agitated about the "rights" of the fetus in the mother's stomach and oppose the "murder" of abortion, take so little interest in the subsequent welfare of the child after it is born into crippling poverty, unwelcome, or a social environment in which it cannot possibly thrive.

The irony in our confused and inequitable tax system is that if we could possibly devise a tax system that would operate with nearly perfect equality, we would not need to pay half the taxes we do now.

The paradox of pedagogy is that the subject most worth teaching is character — and this cannot be taught through formal pedagogy.

We can do good with all our soul, but not bad with all our soul; this is the primal meaning of the word "conscience."

Youngsters enjoy each other because they are healthy together; oldsters for the opposite reason.

A man isn't affluent until he stops having a "good suit."

Continuous Progress: Classroom Trial

By BARBARA McLENTOCK
Colonist Reporter

Robert is nine years old and registered in a Grade 4 class—also called Year 4—at a Victoria elementary school.

Like most youngsters, though, his academic development has not progressed evenly year by year.

He's a keen and avid reader and can now understand the Grade 6 reader with ease. He enjoys the Grade 5 social studies books.

But his arithmetic is weak, and he struggles hard to do the work some children were doing at the end of Grade 2.

Ten years ago, despite his own development, Robert would have spent nearly every hour of the school day doing Grade 4 work with a group of Grade 4 students.

Frustrated

He might well have been bored in the reading and social studies periods because they were too easy for him. And he would certainly have been frustrated in arithmetic when he could not understand the work—his classmates seemed to grasp so easily.

But today Robert, though registered in a Grade 4 class, is doing his reading out of the Grade 6 reader—and out of literary books at a Grade 6 level.

He's answering the questions in the Grade 5 history workbook.

And he's getting special help from his teacher in arithmetic as he finishes his Grade 2 book and starts the Grade 3 one.

Blanket Term

The reason for the change is that Robert attends one of several Greater Victoria elementary schools which are trying a program of continuous progress—each child moving through the school curriculum at his own rate.

Wiens

lot of explaining instead of having to cover a certain amount of material in each subject in each 10-month school year.

Continuous progress is a blanket term which covers a wide variety of specific programs schools are trying, director of education Dr. John Wiens said in an interview.

It's closely related to the idea of individualized instruction, where children are taught in smaller groups than their whole class according to their differing levels of accomplishments and needs.

And it's closely related to the abolition of grades at the elementary level—although grades remain, and will probably continue to remain, an administrative necessity, Wiens said.

Expect Marks

Parents can sometimes be a problem in carrying out a program of nongradedness because they often don't understand what the school is trying to do, Wiens said.

"It's not their fault, the idea was completely unheard of when they went to school."

"But it means that we have a lot of explaining to do to them so they'll understand and help us as much as possible."

Many parents, he said, want to know exactly how well their children are doing in school—and they expect percentage marks or at least letter grades, to tell them this.

"They find it hard to understand that we are getting away from the idea of graded-step marking, and that their children are only being graded as satisfactory or unsatisfactory."

But, Wiens emphasized, continuous progress programs can also be developed in the ordinary classroom, and can work well there.

An ideal continuous progress program, he said, would include all these features, but so far there are no ideal ones in Victoria.

In fact, Wiens has seen only one class of children he believes really had the continuous progress idea working about as well as it could. That was in Toronto, and the class had been established a long time, he said.

Slate Process

Changing even one class, from the traditional lock-step system—where children were divided rigidly according to age and average academic progress—to the free system of continuous progress is a long, slow process.

So Wiens said, different Greater Victoria district schools are experimenting with different small pieces of the complex overall change necessary.

McKenzie elementary is trying to break down the great lumps of material to be taught in each grade into much smaller units, so the children can move from unit to unit, instead of from grade to grade.

Fairburn elementary is working out the complex recording system necessary for continuous progress. When the children move from one teacher to another, it is important the new teacher knows what level the children are each at in each subject.

Description

A third school—Quadra elementary—is holding parents' meetings to try to acquaint the parents of their children with the new system, in which they cannot say that their child got three A's and two B's on his report card. Nor even that he's in Grade 5.

Throughout the district, letter or percentage marks on report cards have been replaced with descriptive comments by the teachers, telling parents their children's strengths and weaknesses.

Behind the changes, said Wiens and supervisor of primary instruction Harold O'Donnell, was a basic change in the assumptions schools were making about children.

Before, they said, the basic assumption was that children wouldn't learn anything unless they were made to, that they were generally somewhat lazy and didn't like school or working.

But Wiens said he believed "that all children underneath like to learn. They have a natural curiosity."

A Failure

One of the things that often goes wrong, O'Donnell said, is that a child who is slower at understanding things than others in his classroom comes to think of himself as a failure, as stupid, as unable to learn.

This way many more children can stay with their friends the same age instead of being held back because of their inadequacies in some subjects.

However, there are still those who end up a year or more behind in that they take four years to do three years work—or a similar arrangement.

It also helps children who are slow in some subjects to move quickly and gain success in others in which they are good, Wiens said.

Transition

But the continuous progress idea is not without its problems.

One of the hardest to overcome, Wiens and O'Donnell said, is the transition between continuous progress at the elementary level and the structured graded system of the high school.

There have been experiments made at the high school level in Greater Victoria with continuous progress in single courses. But generally the pressures on high school students to pass university entrance examinations have prevented it from being a success there.

There is also a problem when the child who has been moving at differing rates in various subjects through elementary school, must suddenly be up to Grade 7 standard in each subject to move on to junior high.

Extra Time

In these cases, O'Donnell said, the teacher usually tries to let the student spend extra time on the subject in which he is behind and to give him extra help in it.

O'Donnell pointed out that some children do not like the idea of continuous progress. "They like the security of knowing exactly how well they're doing—especially the good students."

But no matter what the problems, Wiens said, the system appears to those in the Greater Victoria district to have enough merit to be more widely used.

The administration and many schools intend to keep working to make continuous progress more effective.

Weddings

Zak—Groves

Reverend J. R. Allen officiated at a lovely double ring ceremony at St. Agatha's United Church, October 23, 1971, when Lynn Frances, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Groves, Victoria, exchanged wedding vows with James Brian, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Zak, of Coleman, Alberta.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, was lovely in a floor-length gown of white crepe with ivory and gold accents. A pearl hair held her flowing veil. She carried red roses and white carnations. The bride was attended by her mother, Mrs. Groves, and Miss Marilyn Groves, sister of the bride, who was bridesmaid.

The groom, dressed in a tuxedo, carried a bouquet of pink carnations with white ribbons. He was escorted by his brother, Mr. Bob Zak, brother of the groom, who was best man and usher were Messrs. Rick Reid and Jim Tarrant.

A reception followed at the Gordon Road Recreation Centre. Mr. Harold Penney gave the toast to the bride. For her, a three-piece purple suit with the ivory lace left for a modernistic trip through the western states and Canada. Among the numerous out-of-town guests were Mr. and Mrs. Henry Zak, Mrs. Vera Groves, Calgary, and Mr. and Mrs. Ernie, Coleman. The bride and groom's grandparents, also many others from Columbia, Baltimore, Edmonton, Calgary and Vancouver, Surrey and Duncan.

Sholchet—Stephenson

Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Stephenson, of 2210 Kilgus Place, are happy to announce the marriage of their daughter, Jocelyn Ann, to Dr. Jim Sholchet, son of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Sholchet, of Toronto.

The young couple were united in a civil ceremony which took place November 3, 1971.

Dr. and Mrs. Sholchet are currently residing at 522 Linden Avenue, Victoria.

Kennedy—Peters

Reverend A. E. King officiated at a double ring ceremony in the Metropolitan United Church Chapel, October 9, 1971, at 5 p.m., when Sandra Irene, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Reed, Clatskanie, B.C., exchanged wedding vows with Keith Alexander Kennedy, son of Mr. and Mrs. G. B. Kennedy, Victoria, B.C.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a floor-length, empire-waist gown of gold and blue, accented with long sleeves and high collar trimmed in lace. The dress was complemented by a floor-length white lace veil which formed a short train. A lace band completed the formal style. Her cascade bouquet was of yellow roses and white carnations. The only flower girl was a young girl named Lisa, daughter of the bride. Bridesmaids were Miss Lisa Larsen and Miss Brenda Peters, niece of the bride, who carried bouquets of white mums and mauve accents. Best man was Mr. Gordon Kennedy, Mr. Jim Peters, brother of the bride and Mr. Ted Kennedy, brother of the groom, acted as the officiant.

Reception followed at the Tennyson Travel Lodge. Mr. Jim Balmforth presented the toast. The bride gave for her going away with a light blue two-piece suit, outer accessories and a bouquet of yellow roses. Out-of-town guests were Mr. and Mrs. Eric Phillips, Clatskanie, B.C., Mr. and Mrs. Jim Peters and Diane Richmond, B.C., and Mrs. Ken Peters, Harrisville, B.C., and Mr. and Mrs. Len Smith, British Columbia.

Belfast Battle Rages On

Canadian's Paper Fired

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (UPI) — Gunmen bombed a Belfast hotel, a job and a Canadian-owned newspaper plant Saturday and battled British troops near the border of the Irish Republic.

Police said seven men planted a bomb weighing between 50 and 100 pounds in the printing plant of Belfast Telegraph Newspapers Ltd. then fled before it exploded and demolished a large section of the four-storey building.

The Belfast Telegraph, which supports Northern Ireland's Unionist government, is owned by Canadian publisher Lord Thompson.

Gunmen, armed with sub-machine guns and pistols, invaded the building in downtown Belfast shortly before 7:30 a.m. as the plant's manager, Frank Morrow, arrived for work.

"I had just opened the door when I felt a gun in my back and a man said, 'We are blowing this place up' — just go on inside," Morrow told newsmen.

"They ordered me to lie on the floor and said when they left I would have 30 seconds to get out. It was like eternity."

A bomb planted in the lobby of the Wellington Park Hotel by four youths wearing hippie-style clothing and broad-brimmed hats pulled over their faces wrecked most of the four-storey building.

A harman said the youths gave guests and employees at the hotel several minutes to evacuate the building.

Three men and a woman were injured when a 50 pound bomb exploded in Belfast's dock area.

An army spokesman said British troops patrolling the border with the Irish Republic in County Tyrone came under rifle fire from across the frontier. The spokesman said there were no military casualties.

In Belfast a woman told reporters how gunmen burst into a dentist's waiting room and machine-gunned an 18-year-old Dutch seaman, Rene Heemskerk, to death.

"The door burst open and two men wearing long hoods over their heads came in," said the woman, who asked not to be identified. "One of them carried a sub-machine gun. Before I knew what was happening he opened fire."

"I was terrified and my baby was screaming in fear. The man who was shot never had a chance."

Didn't Know It Was His

LONDON (Reuter) — Lord Thomson said Saturday he only realized a printing plant bombed in Belfast this morning was one of his when a reporter asked him for comment.

He said he had heard about the blast but hadn't known it was at his W. G. Baird Ltd. plant until the firm was named when Reuters asked him for reaction.

"I didn't know it was there," he said.

Dispute Moves To Arbitration

KAMLOOPS (CP) — After seven weeks of talks, salary negotiations between 700 teachers in Kamloops and the board of School District 24 have been referred to binding arbitration.

A joint announcement Friday by the board and the Kamloops District Teachers Association said they will continue their negotiations up to the date the arbitration board hears the dispute.

The chairman of the school board negotiating committee, Cliff Branchflower, said the provincial government's refusal to share teacher salary increases above 6.5 per cent played a part in forcing the issue to arbitration.

He said: "It's difficult to say whether the minister's (Education Minister Donald Brocks) announcement was the only cause of sending this to arbitration, but he certainly made it difficult to obtain a settlement."

Gandhi Tour Ends

Border Tension Less Tolerable On Her Return

Cuban Tape Probed

MIAMI (UPI) — Spanish speaking police listened to a tape recorded Cuban revolutionary message Saturday, attempting to identify the voice of one of four armed men who took control of a Miami radio station and beamed a broadcast to Cuba.

The only clue provided in the tape was the sound of jet aircraft behind the man's voice which might indicate that it was recorded somewhere in the vicinity of an airport.

Police said the men, armed with automatic pistols and wearing green fatigues with dark green hoods over their faces, burst into the control rooms of WQBA-AM, a leading Cuban exile station, at 11:05 p.m. Friday. They bound newsman Luis Fernandez and then held a pistol to the head of talk show host Jose Alva.

The men ordered Alva to play a 3½ minute tape recording which could have been heard by listeners in Cuba tuned to the 10,000-watt station.

The taped message told Cubans living under the regime of premier Fidel Castro to "take to the streets to purify the revolution, but don't tell anyone about it because we could be your enemy or could be an intelligence agent."

Fernandez and Alva, who were alone in the station, were not harmed by the gunmen.

Fresh fighting was reported along the East Pakistan border. It was reported that the Pakistani government has been in contact with rebel leaders in East Pakistan.

Mrs. Gandhi was greeted on her return from a three-week swing through the United States and other Western nations by about 1,000 cheering supporters. She said she believed her trip resulted in better understanding abroad of the East Pakistan situation, but she had no idea when a solution could be found.

Asked about remarks she made abroad about the Indo-Pakistani situation becoming intolerable, she replied: "I think it is obvious that if the tension goes on increasing it becomes less and less tolerable."

As the prime minister returned, there were reports of a fresh clash between Indian and Pakistani troops at Shikarpur on the East Pakistan frontier, as well as further casualties in shelling incidents.

Radio Pakistan reported that Indian army soldiers in battalion strength (about 1,000 men) attacked an army position Saturday at the Jagnagar border outpost in East Pakistan's Kushtia district about 60 miles north of Calcutta. The official radio said the Indian attack was beaten back with 24 Indians killed and six captured.

Well-informed sources here said that the West Pakistan government has been in contact "to a limited degree" with East Pakistani rebel leaders in Calcutta through American diplomatic channels.

There was no immediate indication of what proposals, if any, had been made in the messages or of the reaction of the rebel leaders.

Mariner Circling Mars

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — The United States rocketed its Mariner 9 spacecraft into orbit around Mars Saturday, beginning an unprecedented study of the Red Planet that could write a new chapter in the annals of space exploration.

Mariner 9, looking like a plump pear with four popliteal sticks protruding from the side, became the first spacecraft to orbit another planet in the solar system.

cal manoeuvre in which solar panels supplying electricity moved back into view of the sun and battery operation of the spacecraft ended.

Mariner 9 reappeared at 5:16 p.m. and ground controllers received first signals six minutes later — the time it takes radio waves to reach Earth from Mars.

Tracked with scientific instruments — two television cameras, an infrared radiometer and an ultraviolet and infrared spectrometer — Mariner 9 could give man the closest look he's ever had at another planet.

The spacecraft was designed for a basic 90-day mission but could send back data from its twice-daily orbit around Mars for up to a year.

The $15-million spacecraft wasn't designed to find life on Mars, if it exists, but is expected to pinpoint areas where conditions might favor life.

A thick haze continued to shroud Mars Saturday, and California Institute of Technology's Jet Propulsion Laboratory scientists here, who give directions to Mariner 9, fretted that the haze might obscure surface features and prevent television mapping of the crater-pocked surface.

Scientists believe that the yellowish haze is dust kicked perhaps 10 miles into the atmosphere by a storm that has raged over the planet since late September. It is the worst storm ever seen on Mars in 70 years of Earth-based observations.

Although all indications are the haze is composed of dust, many scientists have trouble visualizing winds in the rarefied Martian atmosphere that could churn up such a haze.

Astronomers at the Lowell Observatory in Flagstaff, Ariz., headquarters for the In-

It apparently arrived at Mars ahead of two Russian space probes, Mars 2 and 3, which Western scientists speculate will attempt unmanned landings.

The spacecraft ended its 5½-month, quarter-billion-mile journey at 4:14 p.m. PST when a 15-minute burn of the Mariner 9 retrorocket slowed an 11,000 mile-an-hour plunge so Martian gravity could swing it into orbit.

Thirteen minutes after its retrorocket — firing with the power of 10 automobile engines — shut down, the spacecraft passed behind Mars and out of communication with Earth.

Photos showed Mars filling the entire TV monitor, and scientists watching could clearly see the south polar cap of frozen carbon dioxide through the haze.

'See Detail'

"I'm very pleased with this. I think it demonstrates the atmosphere is clear enough to see surface detail up close," said Dr. Bruce Murray of the California Institute of Technology. More pictures were scheduled today.

While behind the planet, Mariner 9 completed a criti-

Plane Hijacker 'Bent On Self-Destruction'

Pilot Ehman describes in-flight battle

Wild Man In Fight Says Pilot

CALGARY (CP) — An armed hijacker who brought an eight-hour reign of terror aboard an Air Canada DC-8 Friday night appeared "completely deranged and bent on self-destruction," the jet's pilot, Capt. Vern Ehman of Montreal, said Saturday.

The saga, which began on Flight 812 east of Regina, ended early Saturday morning when a crew member clubbed the hijacker with a fire axe.

The airplane was approaching Calgary at 3,000 feet, Ehman said, when the hijacker asked for a knife to cut the twine on a package he claimed contained a parachute. He had threatened to blow up the plane with dynamite unless he was allowed to land.

The captain told a news conference that he offered the man a fire axe and when he put down his sawed-off, double-barrel shotgun to cut the twine, Ehman realized that "might be the only chance I would get."

Pitched Gun

"I pitched the gun down the aisle as far as I could and grabbed his throat," he said he shouted for help and Chief Purser John Arpin of Toronto jumped in. The fight, the hijacker "fought like a wild man."

Assistant purser Philippe Bonny hit him on the head with the flat side of the axe, but the man managed to get an arm free and reached for a pocket crying "I'll blow you all up."

Police later removed an undetermined amount of explosives from the plane. The purser grabbed the hijacker's hand just before it reached some wires believed connected to the explosives and the assistant purser hit him again with the axe handle, the captain said.

NEW YORK (AP) — Labor and management teams ratified a new contract early today to end a 41-day coal strike that idled 100,000 miners in 20 states.

The three-year pact called for increasing wages of skilled workers to an average $50 a day from $37 and doubling coal royalties. The industry put a $1.2 million or 30 per cent price tag on the wage and benefit package.

Unions said men could be back on the job Monday.

Cambodians on Run

PHNOM PENH (Cambodia AP) — A Cambodian garrison was forced to abandon the rubbled town of Rumlong on the northeastern front Saturday, leaving behind more than 400 wounded, the high command said.

The garrison quit the town, 52 miles northeast of the capital, after a 19-day North Vietnamese siege. They left in small groups, about 500 out of an original force of 1,000. Only about 30 have reached safety so far, the command reported. The others may have been killed or captured.

The fall of Rumlong was a serious setback. It left the North Vietnamese in firm control of four miles of Highway 6. To the north about 20,000 Cambodian troops, who launched an offensive to clear the highway in October, must be supplied by air.

A high command spokesman, Capt. Chhang Song, said about two battalions at the hamlet of Treul, near Rumlong, were able to save most of their men by striking out to the north. They blew up their ammunition in Treul.

The North Vietnamese 9th Division struck in a counteroffensive Oct. 26, aiming their main blow at Rumlong. At that time, Cambodian forces in the road clearing operation were strong along Highway 6 and were vulnerable to attack.

In addition to Highway 6, North Vietnamese troops have cut Highways 2, 3, 4 and 5, leaving only Highway 1 to Saigon open to normal traffic.

North Vietnamese forces were active around Phnom Penh. Officials were forced to cut all commercial telecommunications with the outside world because of fighting near the Kamboj transmitting station, 10 miles southwest of Phnom Penh near Highway 4.

News correspondents sent out dispatches on commercial airlines.

A spokesman said another battle erupted late Saturday near the sugar-refinery at Keping Team, 15 miles southwest of Phnom Penh on Highway 4.

Amidst Affluence There's Still Want

What Does Christmas Mean?

By DON COLLINS
Column Reporter

The kid wants to know what Christmas really is. He knows all about the history of the day, what it stands for. But he wonders what it really means in today's hectic world.

His father grins for an answer. He finds it easier to tell him what Christmas should be — but sometimes isn't. It should, of course, be a time of much happiness. Which it is. It should not be a day of despair torn from want and lack of concern. But it is that, too.

The bad side of the Christmas story can be found all too easily in such pockets of affluence as Greater Victoria. It is not something confined to less fortunate areas of the world.

This year, as usual, the vast majority of people in Greater Victoria will step from a tangle of discarded gift wrappings to tables overburdened with the rich foods that befit the occasion.

They will be comfortable and secure within their family circles.

This is Christmas as the kid knows it. It is that way, too, for his friends. But what about the others — the ones his father has mentioned?

So his father tells him about a few. Like Joe who has a wife and four kids and no job. Or Sarah and her five kids, deserted by the husband and father of the family. Or the guy down the block who can't work because he is sick. Emotionally sick. But sick just the same.

The list goes on and on . . . and on.

These are the people for whom Christmas, 1971, would seem to have little to offer. Their numbers are even greater this year because of an uncertain economy.

People talk of the good life and big wages. But other people talk of the unrelenting employment picture and U.S. economic measures that pose a threat. Most of all, they talk

Bright Angel Park

Youngsters Won't Help To Clear Soccer Pitch

GLENORA — Jerry Hebers once had a lot of faith in community spirit — and possessed a generous share of the same spirit himself.

He is a member of the seven-man Bright Angel park board, and has been working on the park since 1967.

A class "C" park, which restricts the facilities to day use, Bright Angel was the centennial project of a group of people from Glenora, Cowichan Station, Cobble Hill and Eagle Heights.

The 25-acre park, located off Koksilah Road, features fishing — the largest steelhead salmon caught last year came from here; swimming in the Koksilah River and extensive picnic facilities.

Bright Angel also includes a regulation-sized soccer and rugby field, adjoined by a small training field — but these are presently unusable. The land is flat, the grass was sown last year, and the area is dry year round, an unusual feature in local soccer fields.

What then makes the field unusable? According to Hebers, nothing but a bunch of small rocks, just large enough to make a good toss for a medium sized boy.

The rocks — enough to keep a group of about 24 boys busy for one day — are the only obstacle to full use of the field.

"We cannot install the goal posts until the rocks are out," said Hebers.

He said he had tried — unsuccessfully — to contact various schools in the area in an attempt to recruit a group of willing youngsters.

BENNETT OPENS PIONEER TOWERS

PORT ALBERNI (CP) — Premier W. A. C. Bennett Saturday opened the $670,000 Pioneer Towers housing project for senior citizens.

The project, which will house 62 people, was constructed with the help of a provincial government grant of $216,000.

The premier said he would like to see a nursing home for senior citizens built in the Alberni Valley and promised the provincial government would assist in construction of a nursing home.

Leroy Loewen, president of the Alberni Valley Senior Citizens Home Society said there are 57 units in the new building, 32 single units and 25 doubles. The Towers are open to all senior citizens over 65 who have incomes individually of less than $200, or couples with incomes of less than $312. Rents for single units are $65, and for doubles $85, which includes heat, light and water.

"The only costs the tenants pay above their rent are for telephone and television," Loewen said. And to make that easier, a special rate has been arranged with Alberni Cablevision to provide TV cable for $3 a month.

Courtenay Man In Custody After Break-Ins

COURTENAY — A Courtenay man in his early twenties was being held in custody Saturday night in connection with ten breaking and entering in Courtenay which occurred early Saturday, Courtenay RCMP reported.

In addition, RCMP said, investigation is continuing into the theft of six revolvers, one pistol and two rifles early Saturday from Happy's Tire and Sporting Goods, 256 Sixth Street, Courtenay.

Entry into the sporting goods store, RCMP said, was gained by forcing open a back door. They said total estimated value of the guns taken is $1,000.

Theft of the guns, RCMP said, appears to be unconnected with the break-ins in Courtenay.

RCMP said seven businesses were broken into at the Courtenay shopping plaza. They said about $130 in loose change and petty cash was taken.

Entry was gained into the businesses, RCMP said, by smashing windows.

In addition, RCMP said, the Courtenay Courthouse, a Taste-Freeze stand and the Bamboo Inn cafe were broken into but nothing was stolen.

They said motive for all the break-ins in Courtenay appeared to be cash.

Cowichan Teachers Wages Talks Go to Arbitration

DUNCAN — Cowichan Teachers' Association and the Cowichan School Board have abandoned wage talks and plan to hand over negotiations to a three-man arbitration board.

Last year the two parties settled out of arbitration for the first time in 10 years.

Trustee Stan Turner, employee relations co-ordinator for the Cowichan Board, explained that the decision had been made by Dr. Owen Giamster, the conciliator between the CDTA and the board.

The battle is really with the provincial government and the local teachers not between the teachers and the local board," said Turner.

He explained that the two major obstacles to settling the dispute were the Vancouver Teachers' wage increase of 8.5 per cent and the ceiling of 6.5 per cent increase for teachers' wages levied by Education Minister Broderick for provincial shareability.

The board, Turner said, had hoped to settle on a 7 per cent wage increase for the teachers. The last counter offer from the teachers, however, was 8.2 per cent.

Other demands from the teachers that the board has not agreed to:

• Higher administrative allowances.

• The appointment of a liaison between the teachers and the board on matters pertaining to education.

• Higher increase in social benefits such as MSA, Medical Insurance and sick leave.

The arbitration board will consist of one member from the CDTA, one member from the board and a third member appointed either jointly or by the provincial supreme court.

Gold River Council

Building Plan Approved

GOLD RIVER — Installation of modular-type accommodation on the land next to the Gold River Chalet was approved by Gold River Council at a recent meeting, subject to a public hearing to remove part of the land for this purpose.

Approval was given to National Caterers Ltd. after council had discussed the plans with company president J. J. O'Neill.

The units will be used to replace Elkhorn Lodge, presently operated by National Caterers as a temporary industrial camp providing accommodation for single men employed at Tahsis Company's Gold River pulp mill.

Action was being taken by council to close Elkhorn Lodge due to National Caterers failure to comply with the conditions of a development permit for the temporary industrial camp.

However, this action has now been suspended pending the construction of the accommodation adjacent to the Gold River Chalet.

National Caterers Ltd. are negotiating with Delta Properties for the purchase of the Gold River Chalet, and in the meantime are operating the hotel on a lease basis.

O'Neill assured council that the units would not detract from the design of the hotel. He said they would be a cedar siding type modular with a roof of cedar shakes and colors matching the hotel.

Speaking in favor of the units, Ald. Lampard said: "We're going to have to have accommodation for single men. I do not see how we can close the existing set-up without giving some alternative."

Alberni Teacher Gets Own Show

Art Edges Out Economics

PORT ALBERNI — His first major one-man show is just ahead for valley art teacher Ken Faris — a collection of more than 60 of his works on display at the Mary Frazee Gallery in Vancouver's Gastown Nov. 18.

Strongly, art was Faris' original plan. He graduated from UBC with first class honors in economics and international studies, went on to the school of advanced international studies of Johns Hopkins University in Washington, D.C. and finally to the London School of Economics and Political Science for a three-year post graduate course in international relations.

With all this dedicated work behind him, he then decided to go into art. The Polytechnic School of Art in London gave him his intermediate certificate in arts and crafts. He then went on to the Chelsea School of Art in London for further instruction in drawing, painting and etching.

Then it was back to UBC to obtain his teacher training, again entering with first-class honors. In addition to attending courses at the Banff School of Fine Arts, he worked for two years as a lecturer in art and co-ordinator of the painting division there.

Somewhere in between he found time to travel in Europe, spend some time with the world university service seminar in India and visit Sierra Leone.

Now married, with two small daughters, Faris enjoys his work as a teacher but admits that the perfect life would be to teach a group of interested and enthusiastic students one day a week and paint the other six.

Faris has had other one-man shows, one at the Banff School of Fine Arts.

And he has had a one-man show at Echo Centre in Port Alberni, as well as many entries in group exhibits. However, he looks forward to his coming exhibit as his most important showing to date.

Faris finds time to do a great deal of painting in oils, water-colors and pastels. His especially seem to reflect what he refers to as his "empathy with nature."

Thick paint in earth colors reflects the rolling rhythms of the contoured hills, or the repetitive quality of tree trunks and rocks.

Yet his figures have great mobility and appeal also.

A striking self-portrait shows him, in the days before he grew his luxuriant beard and without his glasses and portrays him as a rather serious, young man with a determined chin and firm lip line.

"That's how he looks when he's painting," says his wife Lois. But the dedicated artist hides behind a friendly manner, a warm smile and a well-coming handshake.

The Faris will be in Vancouver for a preview part at the opening of the showing, in addition to more than 60 framed oils and watercolors. Faris will have several portfolios of his work from etchings to abstract designs which interested patrons or the gallery will be able to enjoy during the three week exhibit.

Worker Dies

CAMPBELL RIVER (CP) — Jack Sundstrom of Campbell River was killed Wednesday in an industrial accident at the Raven Lumber yard in Campbell River. RCMP said an inquest is expected to be held about Nov. 24.

Seminar at Cowichan Salves Many Wounds

LAKE COWICHAN — The battle is over and all three sides are smiling.

The issue — education. The opponents — teachers vs. administrators vs. school board.

The peace treaty — a special seminar held to discover the most effective management of the educational resources of the Lake Cowichan school district.

The session, held in Lake Cowichan last week, may set a precedent for provincial school district communication.

"The B.C. School Trustees Association contributed financially to the seminar and expressed an interest with a view to using information from this project as a base to prepare similar programmes for other school districts," explained Adam Andrasschuk, secretary treasurer for the Lake Cowichan School District.

The groups who participated in the program were local principals, administrators and trustees. The three strongly supported the program and listed three results:

• An improved understanding and definition of the responsibilities of trustees, administrators and school principals.

• The establishment of an excellent base for communication and involvement and a decrease in problems relating to function, communication, participation, and attitude.

• A simultaneous discovery by trustees, administrators, and principals that they were all working for education and a resulting decision to work together instead of against one another, as had been the case.

Chairman of the principals' group, R. D. Calleberg, said that the consensus among principals had been that the program was "most worthwhile."

They felt that the program had provided the opportunity to sit down and talk out problems and discover the other person's point of view on specific and general issues.

Bernice Sawkins, chairman of the board education committee, felt that the program had been one of the most significant steps the school board has carried out since the new board was elected in 1969.

Trustee Ray Roch felt that the "live-in" approach, where trustees, officials and principals "live" together in the confines of a specific building, served the purpose of understanding each others problems and needs.

All three felt that the aftermath had been a significantly improved working atmosphere with more communication and a healthier involvement in decision making over concerned areas.

NDP Hopeful Criticizes Road Program

COURTENAY — Highway Minister Wesley Black has become the target of a blast from recently-nominated NDP candidate for Comox riding, Mrs. Karen Sanford.

She referred to his announcement that residents of the northern end of the island must wait for paved roads.

Mrs. Sanford said in a press release: "For many years these people have had to put up with inadequate roads and high automotive repair bills, only to be told to be patient."

Sex Theatre Unplugged

GRONINGEN, The Netherlands (UPI) — The authorities have pulled the plug on Groningen's "modern sex theatre" because telephone callers were jamming the local switchboard, a spokesman for the Dutch post office said Friday.

The theatre's telephone was disconnected following complaints from 2,000 other subscribers with the same area code number that callers could not reach them, the spokesman said.

Organ Concert Held To Restore Chapel

DUNCAN — The second in a series of organ concerts to raise funds towards the restoration of the Fairbridge School chapel on old Koksilah Road will feature Barry Waterlow on the chapel organ, 7:30 p.m., Monday.

Waterlow has studied music at Victoria, Trail and Shannigan Lake, where he attended school.

An arts student at the University of Victoria, he is now assistant organist at St. John's Church at Victoria.

During the recent Byron Hosking, also of Victoria, will sing Music of Tudor England.

Hosking presented the first of three organ recitals at the Fairbridge chapel earlier this month. He is a fourth-year student of music at the University of Victoria.

The third and last organ recital at Fairbridge Chapel, 8 p.m., Dec. 1, will feature Herman Bergink, also of Victoria.

There will be no entry fees but a collection will be taken and proceeds will be put to wards the restoration fund of the chapel, which was not used for several years.

The chapel had been damaged by vandals and a group of Fairbridge residents took it upon themselves to make the chapel available for church activities and concerts.

GOODWILL STORE EXTENSION PLAN

COURTENAY — An addition to the Goodwill store here, which is a Rotary sponsored project, is presently being discussed by club members.

This week, members agreed that the idea of expanding the present facility was a good one and one suggestion made would actively involve club members in some phases of the construction.

The plan suggested by President John Farquharson would see a 2800 sq. ft. addition to be used for electrical repair work. He said the cost would be approximately $30,000 of which the rotarians would find $5,000, with the balance funded through a government grant and a mortgage.

The Courtenay Rotary Club already owns the property adjacent to the present Goodwill store.

Goodwill enterprises, hire people with handicaps and do some on the job training.

Other stores are located in several island towns.

VICTORIA, B.C., SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1971

In the very early days Victorians had a servant problem. In the intermediate years more help became available, but it was largely untrained: girls from the United Kingdom, the Scandinavian countries, particularly Finland, and middle Europe were introduced by their new mistresses to cap and apron and to the kitchen range — unless a Chinese were already doing the cooking. But in 1871, year of British Columbia's entry into Confederation, The Daily British Colonist expressed concern for the lack of domestic help.

Servant Problem Irked Victorians

A few years ago, wrote David W. Higgins, editor and owner of The Colonist, servants cost no more than $3 to $5 a month. Now they are difficult to obtain at three or four times the rate.

There were two reasons for this state of affairs, in his opinion: the distaste of Canadian women for what was looked upon as menial labor and an increased demand for their services in various manufacturing industries — although that surely hardly applied in Victoria.

The remedy favored by Higgins — and no doubt most of the wives in Victoria — was importation of domestic labor from Britain.

By now the going rate for servant girls was $20 to $25 a month in British Columbia, and more for a cook, but there were few applicants.

As a substitute, Higgins observed, Chinese had to some extent been employed; but although there were exceptions, for the most part they were poor house servants, "being extravagant, self-willed and altogether too independent. And besides the great bulk of them have to be taught to do everything and once taught they will either extort exorbitant wages or leave."

They were being paid from $15 to $25 a month as cooks and something considerably less as houseboys or "makee-learn cook."

This crisis in the kitchen of the province's capital city had been matched by the situation in City Hall, where The Colonist had uncovered what it claimed was evidence of corruption in contracts for street improvements.

That unpleasantness was now at an end, with the man who had been mayor, A. Locke Robertson, now elected to the first legislature in the new province. He had never been cited by The Colonist as a party to the shameful business of the street mending racket, nor had he been one of those on city council who had agitated for libel action against the newspaper. Indeed, he enjoyed the support of Higgins and The Colonist during his brief campaign for a seat in the House.

On Nov. 9 the civil elections had been concluded, with the last word heard from, in James Bay, The Colonist's selections, R. Lewis and T. R. Mitchell had been returned to join councillors from Johnson Street and Yates Street wards.

The downtown wards already had elected Charles Gowen, another Colonist candidate, and J. E. McMillan, who was not; and J. G. Taylor and G. C. Gerow who had found favor with Higgins.

And there was W. J. Macdonald established in the mayoral chair, much to The Colonist's satisfaction. He had been drafted, as the modern-day term has it, for the office after Robertson's departure for the legislature. Almost the whole of Victoria's leaders in the business and professional community had signed the petition for his services. He won office by acclamation.

The Colonist took further pleasure in announcing on Nov. 14 the decision of the first lieutenant-governor, Joseph Trutch, to call for the formation of the new provincial ministry.

To the premiership was called John McCreight, another Colonist favorite, former attorney-general in the colonial government. It was McCreight, incidentally, who was called upon by Victoria's angry city councillors to advise as to their position in law as a result of the alleged libel by Higgins' editorials. He had told them flatly they had little chance of succeeding, that in any event they could not sue as a body and that they had no business spending corporation money in a suit for damages.

The summons from Government House was not unexpected by McCreight. He was really the only elected member with qualifications and experience sufficient to suit him for the post. His job was to pick a couple of colleagues so that they could meet the legislature as soon as practicable.

In those days the members of cabinet had to return to their constituents for confirmation in office. It was a tiresomely time-consuming process soon to be abolished, like the staggered election dates themselves which found Victoria voting weeks ahead of Cariboo, for example, and Nanaimo ahead of Esquimalt riding.

The same crazy system applied in civic elections; and that, too, was shortly to be changed.

In any event, McCreight chose none other than Victoria's former mayor, Robertson, as his colonial secretary and Henry Holbrook as chief commissioner of lands and works. He himself would continue as attorney-general.

Now it would be possible for the ministers to get about the country's business, hasten the calling of the legislature when elections on the mainland were completed, and, perhaps, stop the clamor of Amor de Cosmos for an early end of the approaching session so that he could go to Ottawa as one of Victoria's first members of Parliament. He proposed to sit in both Houses, for he was already elected to the B.C. legislature, and the federal election was approaching.

Bitterly The Colonist opposed him. He and Higgins were unrelenting enemies, de Cosmos — founder of The Colonist and now proprietor of The Standard — a radical liberal and Higgins an angry Tory.

De Cosmos was to win on this occasion.

News from the mining camps was meagre, for they were in the grip of a particularly grim winter. So the Colonist concentrated on political topics, whose popularity in those days appears to have been consistently high — chiefly, perhaps, because of the vicious personal exchanges and the incredibly violent editorial language.

SEX REARED NAUGHTY HEAD IN VICTORIA OF 1914

By JAMES K. NESBITT

Ladies wore what were called hobble-skirts, the automobile appeared to be here to stay, though many people looked upon it as nothing but a big nuisance; an argument raged as to whether or not men were rude if they failed to remove their hats in elevators when there were ladies present—and, horrors, of horrors—sex had reared its naughty self in public.

The gleaming new Victoria High School, at the north end of Camosun Street, was opened, after much delay by those who said it was an extravagance, and that it never would be filled, and that young people expected far too much in the way of grandeur and comfort. An idle lot, young people, said some of their elders, and they should be made to work for their education, if education they had to have.

It was, apparently, a policewoman who started the discussion about sex, and it raged about her head for weeks. Women were embarrassed, men were furious, children were fascinated.

It was the Victoria of 1914.

I have, you see, been reading The Week again, that fancy publication which had opinions on every subject under the Victoria sky.

The Week announced, somewhat pompously, that it was an "uncompromising opponent of any proposal to teach sex in the public schools."

Such teaching, fumed The Week, "is a sensational American innovation of the most pernicious character, and can find no natural habitat in Canadian schools."

The Week dealt with that bold, unlady-like, far-seeing policewoman: "Miss McDonald . . . declares that teaching of sex hygiene in our schools is the only adequate means of coping with a great national danger."

"Miss McDonald does excellent work as a policewoman, but she should concentrate all her energies on one matter—that of her work as an officer of our police force."

"Even by her own showing there is still more than enough to be done in curbing the particular form of vice which occasioned the appointment of policewomen."

"If this form of vice is prevalent among young children, as Miss McDonald states, then even more policewomen are required, instead of a diffusion of interest as suggested."

"In any event the subject is a delicate one, and we venture to suggest that the policewoman might well follow the excellent example of policemen in one respect, and that is in the refraining from giving interviews to the press on the details of their work."

"Publicity on certain of its phases is almost as objectionable as to teach sex hygiene in the schools."

I cannot learn what happened to poor Miss McDonald—I would think she was either fired, or forced to shut up.

Naturally, there was no mention of this awkward subject when the new Victoria High was opened, with great pomp and ceremony, and much back-patting and hand-shaking.

The Week said: ". . . an interesting occasion in the educational history of Victoria."

"It celebrated the dedication of one of the finest school buildings in Canada to the service of the young."

"Some critics have insisted that it represents an extravagant expenditure, but Mr. George Jay, the chairman of the Board of School Trustees, struck the right note when he said that nothing is too good for the child of today."

"It is true the building represents an investment of $500,000, but it is also true, as Mrs. Margaret Jenkins, chairman of the finance committee said, that every dollar has been well spent, that nothing has been skimmed."

"For the first time, Principal S. J. Willis finds himself in quarters where he can carry on his work efficiently, and his record for many years past is sufficient guarantee that the expenditure incurred will be justified by the educational results."

"The Victoria standard, in this regard, is high, not only compared with other cities in the province, but it ranks high in the whole Dominion."

"Many admirable speeches were made at the colorful, inspiring opening, but the gem of them all was a delightful address from Mrs. Jenkins, the beloved of the scholars and their parents and teachers, the trusted guardian of the public rights, and undoubtedly the doyen of women workers in the public service of Victoria."

"Her remarks were admirably adapted to the occasion, and showed a keen appreciation, not deal oftener than you let other people know you do."

"Next time you are there watch the people leaving—then, when you meet one of them on the morrow casually remark that you saw him—or her—at such-and-such a theatre, and you will hear, 'Oh, yes, I did drop in—I had nothing to do for an hour, and I thought I would see what they are like nowadays. They are really quite amusing, are they not?'"

"But—of course—er—by the way—did you attend the Royal Theatre stage production—elegant, so educational, so cultured."

The Lounger summed up: "It is time this sort of nonsense stopped. Let us face the facts of life."

There was, in The Week, another columnist, signed himself "Bohemian." I somehow think The Lounger and Bohemian were one and the same.

Bohemian concentrated on music and drama, thusly: "The Victoria Amateur Society's 'Tom Jones' is an ambitious attempt, calling for great dramatic skill and high musical ability."

"It is no exaggeration to say that this local performance would have done credit to any travelling company from Broadway."

"Miss Eva Hart, as leading lady, made a charming picture in a quaintly fashioned white taffeta frock, with which she wore a large pale blue hat."

"If Miss Hart's acting was a little lacking in dramatic instinct and force, her singing was exquisite, and could not have been improved upon, while Mr. Petch both played and sang with the verve and finish of a professional."

It was Bohemian who started the uproar about gentlemen's hats.

Elevators—or lifts, as Victoria's best people called them—were new to Victoria, and caused a quandary.

Should, or should not, a gentleman remove his hat in an elevator if there were ladies present?

What happens today? I have such a horror of automatic elevators that I walk up, and so have lost contact with the social custom of lifts. I often suspect hats went out of style because men grew fed up of doffing them to ladies on the streets.

A hat may make certain men look smart, but hats are a darn nuisance. They're always being lost or stolen, or sat upon.

Anyway, let's see what Bohemian had to say in 1914:

"The elevator is one of our most democratic institutions."

"Inside its portals there is no distinction of class, and the pompous millionaire ascending to his palatial offices had to wait while the office boy steps in or out at the intervening floors."

"The lift, however, offers one of the most delicate problems of modern life—whether a man should uncover his head if there happens to be a lady in the company."

"This is a question of more than passing magnitude."

"... the entry of a lady into a lift is the signal for varied emotions on the faces of passengers, from the stolid determination expressed by the man who thinks that women have no business in an office building at all, and therefore should be shown no consideration, to the sarcastic look of the dapper man in the corner, whose face clearly says that he, at any rate, knows his manners, whatever the other ill-bred men may do."

"For my part, I fail to see why it is permitted to breathe cigar smoke and the fumes of alcohol in a lady's face, but bad manners to keep the male head covered."

"The raising of one's hat on the street, and the uncovering of the head in the house are survivals from the time when a knight removed his helmet in a lady's presence, as a guarantee that there would be no brawling whilst she was near, and an acknowledgement that her influence was sufficient to keep him safe."

"Nowadays, though we remove our hats on only of the intellectual requirements, but of the moral standards which should be observed in our public schools."

Motion pictures had come to Victoria, and caused much eyebrow raising. They were looked upon as fast. The best people were said not to attend. Only the riff-raff, the vulgar crust went to the picture, said the best people of Victoria, with Royal looks.

Then it appeared even the best people were sneaking in and out of pictures, and making excuses to explain their presence.

My old friend, The Lounger, writing in The Week, had his say about this in a way that he only, and only he, could write:

"I wonder how long it will be before men and women of established standing in this city will be able to patronize moving picture shows without feeling called upon to apologize to their friends for so doing."

"Sometimes I think that these people are not quite sure whether moving picture shows are quite respectable or not."

"When they express approval they do so in a condescending manner."

"I take it for granted, dear reader, that you 'drop in' at the moving pictures yourself a great

TOMORROW'S CONSERVATIONISTS

Indian Head Rock, near Carmanah Light Station.

Several years ago Christopher Pike of Metchosin came up with a good idea. He thought that the youth of today should, and would, be interested in specializing in forestry and conservation training, and he organized a group of boys which he called the Junior Forest Wardens.

Their activities have been so successful, and their hikes and camping trips so popular that, first thing they knew, all the boys' sisters demanded to be included!

The result is the Girl Forest Guards. Who are, we think, entitled to put themselves on the back. Because, forming a part of this last summer's annual outing, they fitted in so well with what was previously an all-male scheme of things, while yet on approval, as it were, that the gentlemen concerned voted unanimously in favor of permanent female acceptance.

This means, incidentally, that they are the only integrated organization of its kind in Canada.

Christopher Pike approves this, having in mind, say his friends, the thought that an early mutual interest in a comprehensive study of nature and people's relation to it, cannot help but improve any matters involving both sexes ... marriage, for instance!

The ages are, roughly, from eight to 18, and the setup is an informal one. The few rules — but these are rigid — pertain to safety and survival. No one sets forth on a hike, or goes swimming, alone. Fires are handled with unremitting care. No littering is allowed.

Sunday, November 14, 1971

Wardens and Guards meet once a week at the Pike home, where, I am told, they overflow the basement, a small cabin, and a handy trailer. They study all forestry subjects, various outdoor crafts, first aid, compass reading and so forth.

Once a month, year in and year out, no matter what the weather, they have a weekend camping trip. Every youngster packs his own little plastic shelter, his personal gear, and his food supply, which he organizes and cooks himself, although usually job lots of children get together to share a fire.

"They sort themselves out," said one of the parents, Mrs. Titus.

She and her husband, the Reverend Joe Titus, of Colwood, have four boys who belong to the Wardens, have both been on the camping trips in the capacity of leaders, and enjoy the outings as much as the children.

"We're happy to have been 'allowed' to go along," smiled the minister.

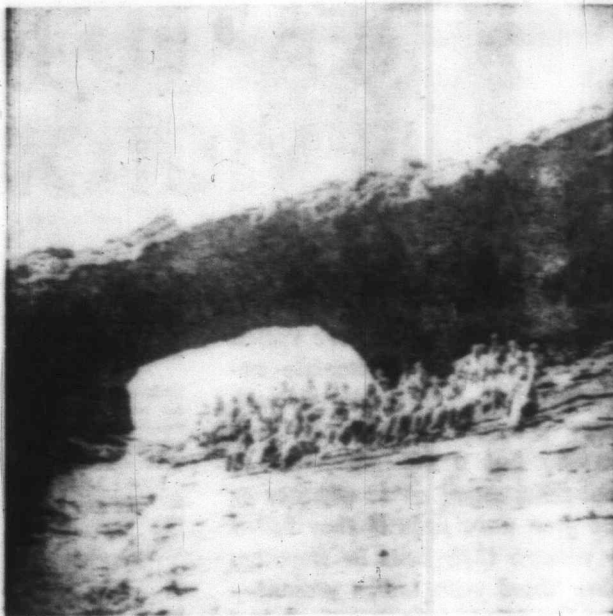

By VIVIENNE CHADWICK

That's another unique aspect of this organization. Occasionally parents may join. I fancy this has to be watched. Little Susie, say, hardly enough and self-reliant on her own, might well go running to mother with imagined woes, were mother too available. They do, you know.

There are hardships. During this last poisonous winter, with its continual rain, snow, frost and vicious winds, the weekend camps were not for the faint-hearted. Dry fuel was a problem. (The idea is to look for standing deadwood, and to carry pitchwood splinters with your matches.) Shelters blew down. Water bottles froze.

The camping spots vary. East Sooke park is a favorite. Botanical Beach has been visited, and so had Sombrio Beach, which latter is a place one and all would like to see established as part of the province's park system.

Once a year, during the summer, there occurs the Big Outing, the 12-day camp. This takes a lot of preparation, careful planning and experienced organization.

It is at this point that help comes from something known, semi-anonymously, they tell me, as the Hoo-Hoo Club. Anyway, this nebulous society consists of Top Brass in the forestry and logging industries, who are generous with financial assistance, and who can and do provide such worthwhile practical support, as a barge to carry camping gear and personnel along a waterway, and a tug, even, to power it! Permits for this and that come with in this fairy godmother scope, as well.

So this last summer some 35 children, under the leadership of Mr. Pike, Mr. and Mrs. Titus, Mrs. Isabel Tipton, Mrs. Helen McIlree, and P. M. Steele, were driven by family cars to Nitinat Lake, loaded on a barge and transported 14 miles to Brown's Bay, near the coast, where they set up their base camp.

They must have had a splendid time. They hiked, all of them, all over the surrounding terrain, pitching overnight camps here and there, and exploring various trails such as that between Tsalal Falls and the Carmanah Light Station, which area they all thought was the most beautiful anywhere.

They had adventures. They came across a stranded couple who, for some reason or another, had been quite unequal to the expedition which they had undertaken, were soaked from several days' rain, had inadequate food supplies, and had even failed to utilize their bits of pitchwood which would have provided them with desperately needed fires.

Our lot rescued these benighted wanderers, dried them out and fed them and sent them on their way, only remarking, with raised eyebrows and the tolerant superiority of the better trained, that: "These trails are not really for amateurs!"

They develop, these young people, a noticeable hardihood. A quite small girl, having somehow lost or mislaid her footwear, hiked a full 10 miles along beaches and woodland trails barefooted and without a murmur of complaint. Her plight was known, but in their wisdom the Powers That Were remained watchful but silent!

(This floored me, who cannot travel barefoot across a flint path between lawn and veranda without yelps of woe!)

Lessons regarding living off the land, or the sea, come in helpful. One very foggy "rest day" our campers garnered masses of shell fish, mostly mussels, from the rocks along the beach, built themselves a smokehouse of sorts, cut down the necessary alder, and strung the finished product of smoked mussels on wires for future use. Like jerked beef. Everybody said it tasted fine.

This summer the group found, and, sometimes unfortunately, came home with, various treasures. What sport ever equalled beachcombing? They came across many Japanese glass balls. They discovered some quite lovely bottles, (if you happen to like bottles, and lots of us do), including some fine tall pale blue ones which had held sake and still had Oriental characters on the remnants of their paper labels. They found plastic floats in all colors, fossils, unique rocks, and, in one spot, some extremely interesting petroglyphs which they photographed and then covered up with sand to prevent despoliation while the photographs go to the proper authorities for possible further research. They found some fine hunks of heavy mahogany, and this young Stephen Titus fetched home for carving, because he had a definite talent as a sculptor.

Also uncovered were evidences here and there of long-age shipwrecks, including an ancient anchor some three feet in length from goodness knows what storied source. This came to the Titus home too, where it appears destined to decorate the fireplace in the family living-room.

Said Mrs. Titus drily, "That's just what I need, of course. A ship's anchor in my living-room!"

Oh well. It's what this ironmongery represents that's valuable. As she knows.

High up on the list of universal interests is a mystery. Preferably one with a suggestion of foul play. Of course there are mysteries and mysteries. A genuine one is said to defy human explanation. In the crime field most can be attributed to inexperienced investigation, especially in the era before science could come up with the answers. End result was a mystery, causing tongues to wag long after the event.

CECIL CLARK, B.C.'s unofficial crime historian, explains why

THEY CALLED IT A MYSTERY

Perhaps our earliest B.C. mystery was The Case of the Headless Indian. Which, unfortunately, turned out to be no mystery at all. It started back in 1863 when Viscount Milton and Dr. W. B. Cheadle headed a party that crossed the Canadian plains and, after a deal of trial and error, found a pass through the Rockies. Later, as students of history remember, their sightseeing took them to Kamloops, New Westminster and Victoria and later still, Quesnel and Barkerville. Which left us a rich and intimate picture of how the gold rush looked to the eyes of strangers, if you care to read their Northwest Passage by Land published in 1865.

It was apparently after their tough trip through the Rockies (in the course of which they ate their packhorses to survive) that late one afternoon they found themselves where Blue River runs into the North Thompson. There, in a forest clearing, they came upon the almost mummified remains of an Indian. He was in sitting position, over his shoulders the rotting fragments of what had once been a blanket, and his skeleton hands were clasped across his knees.

To complete the picture he should have had a bowed head, but strange to relate he was headless. Stranger still, the head wasn't in evidence.

The travellers searched around and finding no trace of the head, jotted the event in their diary as the incident of the headless Indian.

Nine years later, in 1872, Sandford Fleming and his party, surveying a route for the proposed Canadian Pacific Railway, camped at the very same spot. It was, by the way, their 57th camp in their 5,300-mile journey from Halifax to Victoria. Dr. Arthur Moren, physician in the party, having read the story of the headless Indian started looking around for the remains. Finally he came upon a bit of board on which was pencilled:

"Here lies the remains of the headless Indian, discovered by Lord Milton and Dr. Cheadle, A.D. 1863. At this spot we found an old tin kettle, a knife, a spoon and a fishing line; and 150 yards up the bank of the river we also found the skull, which was sought for in vain by the above gentlemen."

It was signed: "T. Party - CPR S." Which meant CPR Survey, and dated four months back, June 5, 1872.

It was perhaps with more zeal than good taste that Dr. Moren dug up the skull, along with the rusty blade of a hunting knife and a horn spoon, which he put in his baggage.

If they got back to his native Halifax, perhaps today these grisly relics are in some museum in the maritimes.

Puzzle, of course, was how the skull got separated from the corpse by 150 yards. Animals, probably, maybe a bear. Anyway the headless Indian story ceased to be a mystery.

There have been several instances where the person with the possible answer to a mystery dies without divulging his secret.

One that comes to mind is the story of poor little Mrs. John Bing who, just before the turn of the century, served behind the counter of her brother-in-law's bakery on Victoria's Store Street. She had to have the job on account of straitened domestic finances when her husband got crippled at his work.

Came the evening of Friday, Sept. 29, 1899 when, following her usual custom, Mrs. Bing locked up the shop and headed westward along the E & N tracks to reach her home in Victoria West.

Apparently she had crossed the trestle bridge and had just entered the rock cut when she was attacked. Not only attacked, but murdered in ghastly Jack the Ripper fashion. It was one of the most brutal crimes that Victoria and its police force had encountered in maybe half a century. Being a seldom-used travel route it wasn't until 9 the next morning that the body was found by city constable Hayward. After inflicting shocking injuries, the murderer had evidently taken two rings from a finger, and later her empty purse was found on the E & N platform.

So stirred was the community that many stores closed for the day, and the sense of public outrage knew no bounds.

There was immediate thought that maybe the murderer might slip away on a Vancouver or Seattle boat and promptly mainland and Puget Sound points were alerted. Meantime, for the next few days, a variety of waterfront roustabouts (who usually shacked up in the Rock Bay area) were run through the city police wringer. Which, after a busy week, left the constabulary with one rather queer individual. Queer in more ways than one was Scottish-born Jack McDougall, who was big and broad-shouldered, and very very tough. In fact so rough in speech and action that most of the barroom drifters figured he wasn't quite right in the head.

From what could be learned of his past, McDougall had served in many parts of the Far East with a Highland regiment.

Whether it was the result of his foreign service, somewhere in his past McDougall had suffered a peculiar disfigurement. Both his ears had been cropped. Which might have been the penalty for transgressing some native custom. Whatever the reason, it was McDougall's secret.

However, Victoria Police Chief Harry Shepherd had more than a suspicion that between those cropped ears lay the key to the gory night-time tragedy on the E & N tracks. So he decided one morning to have a heart-to-heart talk with the suspect.

However when he reached the cell block in the old Cormorant Street station, McDougall wasn't talking. The reason was perfectly simple: the man who had lost his ears had lost his hold on life. He laid dead on his bunk. Dead, said the police surgeon, from natural causes.

Thus, into the grave went the last flickering hope of a solution to the horrible death of little Mrs. Bing. Which has remained a mystery to this very day.

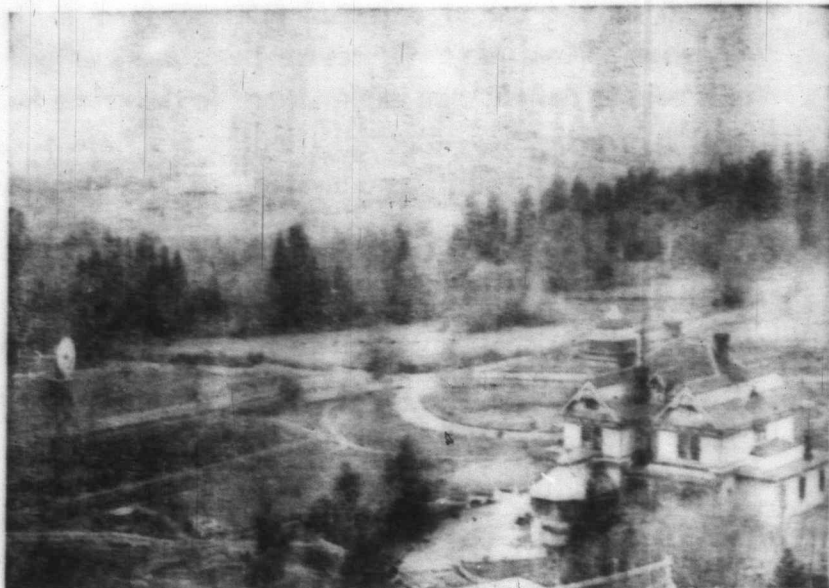

By ARCHIE H. WILLS

Victoria's present real estate boom, which has been changing our landscape, gobbling up farm lands, herding people into high-rises and harnessing residents with agreements-for-sale for 25 and 35 years, along with ever-increasing taxes, has not attracted many old-timers as purchasers. Many of them have unloaded their properties at fancy prices but they do not venture back into the game as speculators.

The oldtimer remembers the years between 1909 and 1913, which, I think, can be lumped under the free-wheeling caption of The Carefree Years. Victoria, like the rest of the west, galloped headlong into a wild orgy of real estate promotion, which collapsed like a ripped balloon.

Taxes on large areas could not be paid by the penniless owners and the Corporation of Victoria became the largest holder of land as it reverted to the city.

It took half a century to unload this reverted

property and get it back on the tax roll. Lots on Fairfield Road, west of Moss, were sold for $50 apiece in 1944.

The Carefree Years followed a period of aggressiveness by two planners, Harry G. Barnard and Capt. J. W. Troup, who, despite the fact that they had no university degrees, a requirement today, set Victoria on her march to her present position as the tourist capital of the Pacific Northwest. These two men brought about the building of the Causeway, which replaced the wooden James Bay bridge, and filling in the mudhole, upon which the Empress Hotel was built.

Barnard, a lawyer and son of the man who operated the Barnard Express to the Cariboo in the gold rush days, proved his sincerity in advocating this rather grandiose plan by putting his reputation on the line. He announced his intention to seek a seat on city council. He was elected in 1902 and two years later, when his plan required a decisive push, he sought the mayor's chair and was elected. He put through the deal which made concessions in regard to taxes and water to the CPR on condition that the Empress Hotel of 160 rooms be built.

The ratepayers wholeheartedly endorsed the deal, which, in looking over the many moves made to enhance Victoria's unique position, must be regarded as the best. Where would this city have been without the Empress Hotel?

Barnard continued his efforts to push Victoria's growth and in the 1911 reciprocity election he won a seat in the House of Commons. He then fought and obtained construction of the Ogden Point breakwater and the two big docks there. Too bad they didn't have honors such as the "Freeman of the City"; then, for here was a man who should have been made one.

Barnard's leadership paved the way for the hurdy-gurdy days which enlivened Victoria, beginning late in 1908 and roaring into 1913. Announcements of new railroad construction and steamship services, new townsites and expansion of old ones, vast home and commercial construction, including skyscrapers, followed one another with increasing speed.

By June, 1908, the boom was rolling at full throttle. One morning it was announced that Craigdarroch Castle, with its 18 acres of land, had been sold for $350,000 to a young man, named Griffith Hughes, who later bought The Times. He announced the land would be subdivided into 124 lots and sold. One of the features of the sale was an inducement that each purchaser of a lot would get a ticket for a draw on Craigdarroch Castle, which had remained empty since the death of Mrs. Joan Dunsmuir the previous year.

The lots were gobbled up but no buyer stopped to conjecture on the problem he would have if he won the castle, which cost so much to maintain that none of the Dunsmuir children, including the then Lieutenant-Governor James Dunsmuir, who had a fortune rated at about $40,000,000, wanted anything to do with it. The eventual winner, Sol Cameron, a lumberman, found it a liability and it reverted to the City for non-payment of taxes and, while it has fulfilled many uses since, it still can't find a buyer.

There was a sudden rash of auction sales of new subdivisions. One included part of the Finlayson estate, bounded by Ryan, Haultain and Kings Road, with Shelbourne running through the centre. The announcer said: "Every lot is worth $400. They are high and dry and level as a floor. There is no rock and a deep loam soil. It is the warmest and most sheltered spot in the city. Terms of sale are: $25 cash on purchase and $10 a month, with interest at 7 per cent." The lots were snapped up.

Another auction sold lots 500 miles from here. Prince Rupert, the new terminus of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, was the magnet. In their frenzy to get their hands on some land to turn over at a profit, buyers gave little thought as to where the land might be. In some cases, it was under water.

The Prince Rupert sale was conducted by Bittancourt and Eaton, auctioneers, in the AOUW Hall (Ancient Order of United Workmen) on Yates Street. It is now the Haida Theatre. Between June 4 and 7 the auctioneers unloaded hundreds of lots at values between $170 and $22,000.

Nearly 600 people jammed the hall for each sale. One of them later became Premier of British Columbia, T. D. "Duff" Pattullo. He purchased two lots for $10,000. A Munday of Victoria paid $8,000 for two lots.

As soon as the auctioneer's hammer fell to close the bidding on each parcel, the buyer had to deposit 10 per cent of the price. He then paid one-quarter of the price in three days and the remainder in one, two and three years.

At the close of the action, when 421 parcels with a value of $323,190 had been sold, auctioneer Bittancourt said: "Grit and determination will be needed to develop these properties and I have noticed these qualities among the buyers here."

While this auction was going on, 55 acres of land in Oak Bay, including the recently discussed Blueberry Hill area, was sold for $85,000 and subdivided.

Another promoter announced the Playground Park subdivision, in the Transit Road-McNeill area, with bargains for one week only. Prices were $500 and $600, with a down payment of $50 and $10 a month, with interest at 10 per cent.

"This is an opportunity to get at small cost," heralded the promoter, "ground for your children, as only wealthy men can afford and such as few wealthy men can ever find."

Then the Saratoga subdivision appeared. It had Monterey, St. Patrick and Oliver Streets as boundaries. The lots were priced at $350 and $450 apiece. The promoters promised the taxes would remain unchanged at 10 mills.

Brighton-by-the-Sea subdivision entered the competition and offered half-acre lots for $550 and $700, with small down payment and the remainder in "six, 12 and 18", which became a familiar agreement in succeeding years. It meant the purchaser agreed to conclude his payments in six months, 12 months and 18 months.

Fairfield, which had been farmland, was eyed by the speculators and was soon under the carving knife. The area surrounded by present-day streets, Robertson, Richmond, Beechwood and Crescents, was cut up into 62 lots, with price tags of $400 apiece.

In the foreground is shown the iron-wrought entrance gates and stone pillars and part of the stone fence which encircled the estate. The two roads leading from the gates are now known as Joan Crescent, left, and Craigdarroch. Also shown are the wooden sidewalk and street car tracks on Fort Street. RIGHT — This scene was taken in present area of Fairfield Road and Cook Street, showing orchard and home of Lieutenant-Governor Joseph W. Trutch. Today Fairfield Road follows the line of the fence and Trutch Street passes in front of the Trutch home, which is still standing.

B.C. Electric Railway announced it had bought 75 acres there and would build a new track from the Esquimalt line to the vicinity of the Gorge bridge. This brought a spurge of development to that area, which quickly spread to the Burnside section.

"Victoria's largest subdivision," the ballyhoo shouted, about the Burnside Park subdivision, which was loosed on the public. Lots were quickly disposed of for $200 apiece, with $10 down and $5 a month.

When the Dean Heights subdivision was opened up, the price of a lot was $675 with interest at 7 per cent.

It seemed that the City must reach a saturation point in this real estate boom. There were but 31,600 people here when the census was taken in 1911 and the question was often asked: "Where is all the money coming from?" Few halted their reckless buying, as they felt the day of reckoning was far off.

A personal reference may give some answer to this question. One Saturday afternoon I was mingling with the feverish crowd downtown when a friend, who was selling real estate, said: "I should get in on a sure thing. He was launching the Parkdale subdivision and he had a lot on Alpha street he would let me have for $100. I took it and paid nothing down. Monday morning he approached me and said: 'I can get you $200 for your lot.' I took it. I hadn't paid a cent for the lot, but picked up a profit of $100 within 48 hours. That's the way this crazy boom was generating its formidable velocity."

It is true the prices were not comparable to those being asked in today's real estate boom, but one must remember that the average wage then was $2.50 a day and, if a man could amass an estate of $10,000, he could retire and live very well. Just try that today!

A surprise occurred in 1911 when the Reservoir Hill subdivision was put on the market. Some unfavorable publicity had been given to the fact that there was seepage from the big reservoir which had been built atop Smith's Hill, on the ridge north of Hillside, and questions were asked as to the safety of this huge storage tank, filled with water for city residents.

A few years earlier a bad fire had devastated a wide area from Store Street east to Quadra Street and there were laments about the lack of water for the firemen. At that time the city's water supply was the contents of Elk Lake, which, however, lacked sufficient fall to build up pressure. To overcome this drawback the reservoir was built on Smith's Hill and it has been a useful facility to this day and has not developed the anticipated leak which would have flooded much of the area.

The deal for lots in the Reservoir subdivision was $375 each, with a deposit of 10 per cent on sale and payments of $12.50 a month.

James Bay did not escape the hand of the developer and Senator Macdonald, who had obtained 27 acres from the Hudson's Bay Company, some years earlier, unloaded this parcel for $750,000 to British interests, who launched a sales campaign featuring the Ogden Point breakwater, docks and sites for industry. Some of it was sold to individuals but much of it reverted to the city, which, after the First World War, set it aside as parkland and, eventually, it became known as MacDonald Park, where sports attractions are now staged.

Property values in the downtown area soared dizzily in the Carefree Years. Old wooden buildings were knocked down and structures built, such as, the Metropolis Hotel, St. James Hotel, the Campbell Building, Strathcona Hotel, Ritz Hotel, The Times Building, Sayward Building, Yarrows Building, main branch of the Bank of Montreal, Central Building, Royal Trust Building and many others, still occupying prominent locations today. The fine Comaught Library, at the back of the legislative buildings, also was erected in this period.

The familiar Balmoral Block, which was brick red and extended on Douglas Street from Fort to View, changed hands for $300,000.

Promoters ventured farther afield into areas, like Cordova Bay, Cadboro Bay and even Shawnigan Lake, where a few summer cottages had been built and were considered well out in the country.

For instance, at Cadboro Bay you could have bought four acres, with an 11-roomed house, barn and chicken house, 75 fruit trees, and 120 feet of waterfront, for $12,000.

A six-room house on a waterfront lot on the Gorge was selling for $8,000.

You could buy two acres on the waterfront in Saanich, for $450, with one-quarter cash and the remainder in one, two and three years.

An acre of land on the Cordova Bay waterfront was being peddled for $500.

If you were looking for a six-room cottage, partly furnished, with rowboat and plenty of cut stove wood, you could get one on Shawnigan Lake for $1,300.

While this lively activity possessed all Victorians, they went to other extremes. Take the party thrown by the German Club to celebrate the birthday of Kaiser Wilhelm of Germany. It was a lavish affair and pictures of the Kaiser and King George V of Great Britain, rested side by side, while Premier Richard McBride gave the main address appealing for unity between the two nations.

The main German figure was the elusive Alvo von Alvensleben, who was buying up much land here and had ambitions of becoming the big cheese when, and if, the much talked of war between Britain and Germany ever came off. Alvo got McBride to concur in sending a telegram to the Kaiser conveying birthday congratulations. Within a couple of years the two nations were at each other's throats and, after a gruelling struggle, which lasted four years, the Kaiser got the boot and ended up on a woodpile in Holland.

An added filp was given to the real estate epidemic by the provincial government's decision to get rid of the Songhees tribe from their reservation on the west side of Victoria harbor. After prolonged negotiations the Indians received $750,850 for their holdings and moved to a new reservation in Esquimalt. The government designated the old reservation as an industrial area and soon it was a centre of shipbuilding, mills, storage tanks, and the Sidney Rubber Roofing Co.

To satisfy the craving for culture in this pioneering community, the citizens responded to a proposal by the Board of Trade and, under the leadership of Simon Leiser, raised sufficient funds and mortgages to build the Royal Victoria Theatre. There was nothing small about this theatre, it was the finest and largest on the Pacific Coast and no theatre had such an extensive stage and dressing rooms. To open the palatial edifice, with its sculptures and posh carpets and seats, Otis Skinner, the great American actor, was brought here with his company and presented "Kismet." If we had men of action in Victoria today, like the businessmen of the Carefree Years, we would have had our convention centre, instead of 40 years of talking about it.

The Canadian Pacific Railway was caught up in the hurricane of enthusiasm and announced it would add another 100 rooms to the Empress Hotel. This was completed in 1913 and is known as the South Wing.

Tourists were flocking into the city and CPR took another step and ordered two steamers for the night service between here and Vancouver. They were the Princess Alice and Princess Adelaide. Another pair of steamers to replace the Princess Victoria and Princess Charlotte on the Victoria-Seattle-Vancouver run were ordered. They were named Princess Irene and Princess Margaret, but, before they could be delivered, they had been taken over by the Admiralty on the outbreak of war in 1914.

In hope that the weatherman could do a better job with his forecasting, the Dominion Government responded to the demand from our business leaders and built the Gonzales Meteorological Observatory which still is a landmark overlooking Foul Bay. Also, Ottawa instructed that the Astrophysical Observatory be built on Little Saanich Mountain. Its 72-inch telescope, the largest in the world at that time, brought much distinction to Victoria.

As the exploration steamer Karluk sailed out of Esquimalt harbor on June 17, 1913, there were signs that The Carefree Years were coming to an end. The Karluk, commanded by Capt. Robert Bartlett, a famed Arctic navigator, and with Vilhjalmur Stefansson, the noted Canadian explorer, and an important group of scientists aboard, was to investigate the Beaufort Sea, off the mouth of the Mackenzie River, where there is much oil activity today.

The dream of the Karluk and the hopes of so many Victorians who had speculated in real estate vanished at about the same time. On Jan. 11, 1914, the Karluk was crushed in sea ice and sank. Many of those aboard perished and little knowledge was gained.

The snowballing demand for payments on agreements-for-sale and notices from City Hall for taxes resulted in ruin for many citizens. Especially on Douglas Street, from Pandora to the City limits, the casualties were heavy, due to the cost of the wide paved roadway.

One of the big legacies of The Carefree Years was the splendid system of paved roads, concrete sidewalks and wide, treed boulevards. And, today, Douglas Street, now our main artery into town from the north, has sufficient width for the traffic, even if it was built 40 years too soon.

BAKE A PERFECT CHRISTMAS CAKE

A century ago a bride was given a feather bed and an iron pot as a dowery. Thus equipped she was supposed to be ready for housewifery. I imagine there were many tears over cooking failures . . . when a cake went sad in the middle, blame was laid on a witch in the oven. My theory about pioneer cooking perhaps is that the poor little bride lacked reliable recipes. Besides the lack of exact recipes there were no standardized measuring cups or spoons.

Grandma's freehand cooking called for a pinch of this, a dab of that and butter the size of an egg. She added flour by the handful and measured liquids in the little blue pitcher. She added flour to make the batter thicker and liquid to make it thinner. I have to admit that my country grandmother was one of the best cooks I ever knew but no doubt she learned the hard way. After cooking for 20 or 30 years you know by the "feel" when the batter is right.

Today we don't have to rely on "feel", which is a pretty handy thing. We have reliable recipes and we have super markets with guaranteed products which have taken the tears out of cooking. Reliable recipes are the main reason why anyone today can cook with confidence.

I don't think there is anything that gives a woman more satisfaction than to bake a perfect Christmas cake. What a joy to open the oven door and behold a smooth-topped, nicely browned cake! What a delight to cut such a cake and find it moist and fragrant! Christmas cake making is something like bridge . . . you follow the rules.

Yesterday I made my Christmas cake (and it's not a moment too soon to have it nicely mellowed by Christmas). The recipe came to me last year, too late to use. It sounded so good when I read it. I decided there and then to use it for our 1971 Christmas cake. I was delighted with the result. My cakes are beautiful.

For the new bride who may be making her first fruit cake and for the housewife who is afraid to attempt this type of cake for fear of failure, I will be very specific with directions for our Holiday Fruit Cake.

HOLIDAY FRUIT CAKE . . .

MURIEL WILSON'S THOUGHT FOR FOOD

glace fruit,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pound) diced or sliced citron,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pound) sliced candied orange peel, 1 cup ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pound) green glace pineapple, 2 cups (1 pound) whole, glace red cherries, 1 cup ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pound) honeyed apricots, 2 cups (2-3 pound) bleached sultana raisins, 1 cup ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pound) whole brazil nuts, 1 cup ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pound) pecan halves 1 cup ( $\frac{1}{2}$  pound) blanched and split almonds, and  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup brandy, or light rum.

THE BATTER . . . 2 cups sifted (before measuring) all purpose flour,  $\frac{1}{2}$  tsp. salt, 1 tsp. baking powder,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup soft butter, 1 cup sugar, 3 eggs and 1 tsp. almond extract. This makes just over 6 pounds rich light fruit cake.

It is best to prepare the fruit and nuts the day before mixing the cake. Regardless of the liquid used in any cake I always plump the raisins up first in sherry. (One pound of raisins will absorb  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup sherry or fruit juice. Heat the sherry and pour over raisins, let stand covered several hours tossing occasionally). For our fruit cake, measure the fruit and place in a large bowl. Leave the cherries whole and cut the pineapple and honeyed apricots in chunks. The almonds should be split but the pecans and brazil nuts can go in right out of the package. Mix well and pour the brandy or rum over. Let stand overnight, tossing a couple of times before bed time. Take the butter and eggs out of the refrigerator at night so they will be at room temperature next morning.

To mix the batter . . . cream the butter well, add the sugar gradually beating until light and fluffy. Add the eggs one at a time beating after each addition, add flavoring. Sift and measure flour and use  $\frac{2}{3}$  of a cup to flour the fruit. Sift the remaining 1 and  $\frac{1}{3}$  cup flour with salt and baking powder. Add to creamed mixture.

To mix the batter with the fruit and nuts, a wooden spoon or your hands make for easier mixing. It is a heavy stiffish batter which must be blended thoroughly. Spoon into prepared pan or pans. Press into corners and smooth the top. The original recipe calls for one 8x8x3 or 9x9x3-inch pan. I used 3 smaller pans as I like 2 small cakes for gifts. I used one 6x6x3-inch pan and two 4x4x3-inch pans and had enough batter for one sample, juicy tin. I like a sample cake to cut immediately so always make a wee one to taste.

The oven should be preheated to 275 degrees F and this heat maintained all through the baking. My little sample cake took 1 hour, the 2 small cakes were done in just 2 hours, while the larger cake took  $2\frac{1}{2}$  hours. They were baked just perfectly. If you cook your cake all in one large tin it will take approximately  $3\frac{1}{2}$  hours. To prepare the pans . . . use 2 thicknesses of heavy brown paper to line the pans. Grease the inside layer. Or you can use two thicknesses of light weight foil and no greasing necessary. I lined one tin with paper and two with foil and both were equally good. Dull or shiny side foil makes no difference.

The fruit for this cake costs approximately $4.50 but it is a lovely rich cake that you can be proud to serve during the festive season. When cut it has all the look of a rich stain glass window.

Last year's Honey Fruit Cake drew so many favorable comments that it deserves to be repeated. A honey cake never crumbles beneath the knife and never dries out because honey has the unique quality of holding moisture within the cake. ## BRIDES' CORNER

ABOUT CHRISTMAS CAKES . . .

Always preheat oven to suggested temperature before putting cakes in the oven. Do not open the oven door until at least half way through baking time.

To test cakes for doneness . . . stick a skewer or pick into the centre of the cake . . . it should come out clean.

Remove cakes from oven to baking rack when done. Leave in baking pans until cold. Remove paper, leave on rack until next day so that surface is completely dry before wrapping.

If cakes are to be iced, let mellow first and frost just before using.

Brush surface of cake with slightly beaten egg white before pressing on almond paste. Allow almond paste to set thoroughly before applying icing to prevent icing discoloring. A little glycerine in the icing will keep it soft.

WARM SALAD DAYS

DEAR HELOISE:

Potato salad is normally known as a summer dish, and with us "can only be made with warm potatoes so the flavor soaks in" (says the head of the household).

Well, wait till he tries this batch for supper . . .

I made my salad in a pyrex bowl with cold potatoes, and when I put my meat in the oven this afternoon, I also put the salad in for about 15 minutes to warm through.

Darned if it isn't just as tasty as starting with warm taters. Better in fact, 'cause it's a treat this time of year! Brenda Staurowsky

LEAVE US NOW!

DEAR HELOISE:

Your tip on raking leaves prompted me to write.

I spray the leaves lightly with the hose before raking. I find that this prevents them from blowing all over the yard, also it is easier to put them in a basket or some container.

When I take them to the curb for the leaf machine to pick up I spread the leaves out in a narrow pile and spray them again.

This keeps the leaves in place until the leaf machine comes around.

This hint is as old as the hills, but I'm sure not everyone has heard of it.

Don't throw away those sticks of cinnamon after cooking with them. Rinse, dry and burn in the fireplace, incense burner, etc.

Hmmmmmm, heavenly aroma.

YOU CAN DO IT!

DEAR HELOISE:

I am 11 years old and got this idea from my teacher: We made upbrella stands using three-pound coffee cans.

It took three cans. We cut the bottom out of two of them and left the third can intact. Then the cans were stacked one on top of the other, using the can with the bottom still in as a base.

They were taped together and then covered with adhesive-backed paper (if desired, quilted material could be used).

BEDSIDE MANNERS

DEAR HELOISE:

Here is a suggestion that might be helpful for someone who is laid up in bed for a few days.

Recently when I had the flu and had to have my meals in bed, I found that the telephone book placed on my lap made an ideal bed table.

I just draped a folded bath towel over it for a tablecloth. Florence Caputi

When I went to visit the Bacons on Dallas Road to learn about Chester Bacon's hand-made beads, I hardly expected to finish up talking about bees.

However, that is just what happened, though one might say that Chester has come a long way

From BEES to BEADS

By MARGARET BELFORD

Chester Bacon was born in Manitoba, and when he was 10 years old, he moved with his family to Kinistino, which at that time—the year 1903—was included in the Northwest Territories. Kinistino, I learned from Mrs. Bacon, is 40 miles southeast of Prince Albert, and the Chester's farm was five miles from town.

His family he describes as being all-round farmers, and self-sufficient into the bargain, since Chester remembers that during the winter time the roads would be blocked solid with snow for weeks on end.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Bacon, who was born in Quebec in that lovely part of the world known as the Eastern Townships, grew up and taught school, first in Quebec and later out west, where she met and married Chester in 1920.

The Bacons had two girls and a boy—the son who is now carrying on the farm in his father's footsteps. The two girls, however, were very musical and indeed one of them, Marilyn, went on to take her degree in music at the University of Washington.

As noted before, Chester Bacon's father was an all-round farmer, and so was Chester for many years.

Somewhere along the way, however, Chester gave up farming and took up bee-keeping. He went into it in quite a big way since at one time he had 300 hives of bees. But apparently that is not so big after all, since he tells me that his son now has some 1,000 hives on the go.

This is really something when one remembers that the standard-sized hive starts out with a standard package of two pounds of bees to one queen. Multiply that by a thousand and the mind positively boggles at the thought of the hum and buzz which must be going on all summer long on the Bacon farm!

While we were on the subject of bees, I learned some interesting points about bee-keeping on the prairies. For one thing, each fall the bees are killed off—all those thousands of them—since the winters, are, of course, too long and hard and there would be no possible way in which they could survive the cruel climate.

As retirement time began to loom, the Bacons, like so many other prairie folk, took to coming out to Victoria for the winters, and in 1941 they finally retired out here.

Chester Bacon did not retire from bee-keeping, however, and for some years still kept his hives going in Victoria. But on coming here, he had more time to watch them and he found them to be a most fascinating study. Of course, he already knew a great deal about bees and their habits, and the habits of animals who might come into contact with them. He also knew some of the oldtime lore such as the old English habit of "telling the bees" all important events, and most especially the oldtimer's habit of reporting all family births and deaths with as little delay as possible.

Chester learned many other things about bees, however, and about other animals as well. During his partial retirement years on the prairies, he had time to watch and note a good many interesting things, and he also started a film about their life and activities. One thing he noticed during this period was that skunks have a great liking for bees, and on an evening, would come out and sit by the entrance to a hive.

Not only would the skunks sit there, but they would also tap on the sides of the hives which, of course, brought out the bees to see what was going on. Thus as the bees came out the wily Mr. and Mrs. Skunk would be right there to snap them up.

The results of all this studying and filming meant that in 1941 Chester Bacon produced a color film which told the life of the bee, and which he named The Harmony of the Bees.

Now, with the matter of the bees cleared up, we can turn to what started Chester off on burl-craft. Though he continued to keep bees here in Victoria until about three years ago, his retirement gave him plenty of time to look around for other things of interest, and like so many of his prairie friends, he was soon charmed by the beauty of old wood to be found along our beaches, and also in the woods.

He says that he stumbled into the hobby of burl-craft quite by chance, and by now has built up a real business out of it.

Chester's first effort at burl-craft was very different from the beautiful jewelry he now turns out. In fact, it was not jewelry at all but, instead, a real grandfather of a chair made from a hollowed out section of a fir tree, with another bit of fir wood to form the seat.

Perhaps this doesn't sound a very comfortable sort of seat, but I've sat in it and can attest to its comfort. It is really comfortable and somehow puts one a little in mind of the ancient fireside settles to be found in old English pubs.

The real beauty of this particular chair is to be seen in the curved back and sides which, of course, were formed of the outside wood of the debarked tree stump. The surface is whorled and full of raised parts—some of which, of course, are the burls. But the thing which makes it really appealing is the fact that in the brown of the wood may be detected not only many shades of brown, but shades of yellow and green as well.

Chester tells me that in this part of the world, when a fir tree is cut down leaving a stump of three or four feet above ground, in certain cases, new wood grows to encircle the old, though this is only likely to happen when the stump is close to a live tree. Woodsmen, I gather, call such stumps niggerheads.

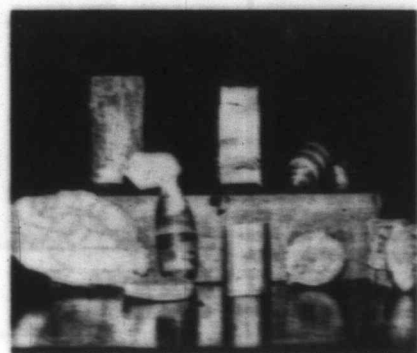

The stump does eventually die, and it is at this point that the color comes into it. It is called healing wood, and provides those lovely greens and browns and yellows which I mentioned before.

Chester Bacon has made all sorts of furniture since then, getting his wood sometimes out of the Metchoin area; at other times about three miles this side of Port Alberni, and also from Campbell River. However, though his furniture has travelled as far afield as the United States and Australia, and that first chair is still his number one pride and glory, he found that quite a number of retired people were going in for furniture-making, and for this reason he looked around him for a new way to make use of burl.

The new way he hit upon was by turning wood into jewelry.

BURL JEWELRY, from unbarked wood to tear-drop pendant.

It is now six or eight years since Chester Bacon has made any furniture for, by this time, his heart is completely won by the effects he can get from turning small scraps of wood into various forms of jewelry.

What is more, he loves the work, for he says that fashioning jewelry gives much more scope for the imagination to have its full play. So, jewelry has been keeping him busy for these last several years since he finds that his new hobby takes all his time—even to the exclusion of his once favorite bees.

At first, when he thought about making jewelry, he thought in terms of making brooches, then pendants and then necklaces, in that order. Though he started first with brooches, Mrs. Bacon still wears the first necklace made by her husband, and very beautiful it is, too. All the work turned out by Chester Bacon is so colorful and perfectionist that, at first sight, one gets the impression that the whole exhibit is made up out of highly-colored polished stones. It is only on handling that the lightweight of them rules out the thought that these gems may be stones.

Jewelry making from wood is, I am told, a very slow procedure, and not one that can be hurried — no matter how you look at it. As a starter, Chester found that he had to devise quite a lot of tools and machinery to fit the type of work he was bent on doing. He already had a cross-cut saw, but found that to this he had to add a motor and mandrel, so placed that either saw or chuck could be used on it. One of his tools, he tells me, was made out of a bunch of hacksaw blades.

The pendants which are usually either flat or teardrop shape and of varying sizes, are for the most part, all made from a single piece of buried wood carefully cut and shaped. After this shaping, very coarse sandpaper is used, and is gradually changed until the sandpaper is of the finest, and the wood so treated is left with a soft and satiny feel. Working with buried woods for these pendants often leads to something which almost shows as a picture on one side or the other of the pendant. Rarely are both sides alike, and the resulting difference is most intriguing.

In making his pendants and necklaces, Chester sometimes uses color to add to their attractiveness, though many of the woods he uses have their own colors varying from browns, through yellow to green. Nowadays he produces jewelry from such woods as tree of heaven, maple burl, Australian gumtree and juniper, also banksea wood and laburnum, as well as many of the more well-known local woods.

Whilst key rings and buttons and flat pendants are each made from a single piece of wood carved to shape and size, the beads for his necklaces go through a very different process.

To begin with, the beads are usually laminated, and may have as many as six different blocks of wood in them. To do this, Chester Bacon selects small square pieces which are first sanded and then glued together in a block. These blocks are quite small, as can be seen from the photo. Each block so made has a small hole drilled through it, partly so that it may be the more easily manipulated on the machinery, and partly because that drilled hole is a necessary adjunct to threading the completed bead.

Once the block of wood has been so prepared, it is ready to fit on the turning tool upon which it is shaped to design and size. When the shape and sizing are completed, it then goes through the sandpapering process. After the final fine sandpapering, the bead is ready to dip. Chester finds that it is more time-saving and efficient to treat approximately 50 pieces of laminated wood at a time. So the first 50 go through the process of shaping and sanding and, if being tinted, this is done, too, and they are then hung up to dry whilst he goes on to the next 50.

In coloring the beads and pendants, Chester Bacon may use ordinary cloth dye dissolved in wood alcohol, or colored inks. Those beautiful deep violet necklaces he makes, attain their color through a solution of ordinary indelible lead pencil dissolved in water. They were among my favorites, though all his colors are so delicate that it is really hard to find a favorite. Each bead has to be hand-dipped separately and hung up to dry. Buttons may get three dips, while pendants and beads need four or five.

After the color dipping is completed and the articles are quite dry, the last process is reached, and this is the final dip for sheen, and for which either shellac or varnish is used. Shellac, however, is Mr. Bacon's first choice as he feels it makes for polish and a very natural finish.

Lately, Chester has been experimenting with a new process which consists of slightly charring the wood with a propane blow-torch before applying the color. This, he feels, gives an even finer finish to the wood.

Chester Bacon's workshop is in his basement and, as Mrs. Bacon says, she rarely enters his work area unless it is to give help with the stringing, or to assist in mounting the finished work for exhibition.

The Bacon Burlcrafts have been on exhibition a number of times, and in 1967 Chester had the honor of winning the Dr. G. H. Young Shield for excellence of design and use of medium at the PNE craft and hobby show.

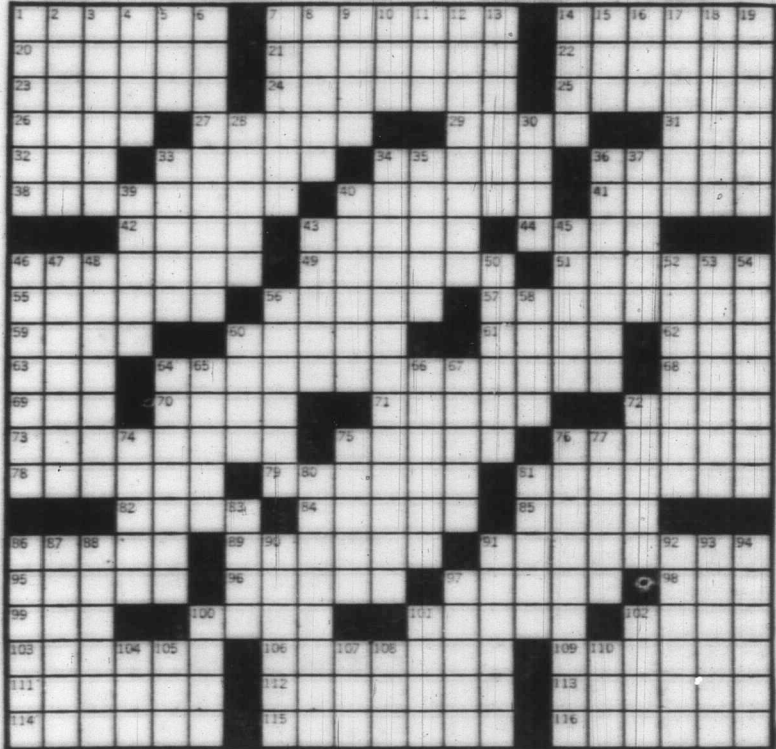

That distinction is a long way removed from the tending of bees. But then, the Bacons have a little motto which they feel exactly explains their ideas, and it is this:

"For lo—behold, the beauty now we see
But yesterday, lay buried in a tree."
And that just about describes it, for as Chester Bacon says — "If you look deep enough, you'll find beauty pretty near everywhere."

SEX REARED UGLY HEAD IN VICTORIA OF 1914

entering a house, we do not think it necessary to uncover whenever we meet a lady on the streets, unless she is an acquaintance, and first bows to us.

"We do not uncover to a lady whom we meet in a corridor of an office building; why, then, should we take off our hats in a lift, which is merely an avenue connection two or more corridors?"

"Some official decision should be delivered on this knotty point, for until it has been decided by competent authority men will look askance at the fairer sex in lifts and elevators.

"Till then we must decide the point for ourselves."

Bohemian then appointed himself the social arbiter, with, I think, very good common sense: "As for me, I shall continue to do what I am doing at present."

"If the lady is known to me, or if she is in the company of a male acquaintance of mine, I travel up and down bareheaded; if she is a stranger, I keep my hat on."

That was that, as far as Bohemian was concerned, though timid males continued to take off their hats when they found ladies in elevators.

The Lady Who Took Off Like a Rocket

By GEORGE ERSKINE INGLIS

"If I had attempted to write for a living, I wouldn't have been able to keep a dog in biscuits, let alone myself in food and clothing. I could have earned more slinging hash."

This forthright appraisal of her own literary talents came from Mrs. Jean MacKenzie who lives with her husband, Edward, and two sons, Bruce and Ross, at 3815 Merriman Drive, Victoria, B.C.

However, there are others who consider this appraisal much too modest. Such as the judges for Canada's Centennial Commission's Literary Competition, Juvenile Books category, in 1967. They awarded Jean first prize for her story Storm Island, a well-written, interesting and exciting tale of two young people and some grown-ups on an island in the Pacific Ocean, just off the coast of British Columbia.

For this, Jean MacKenzie received the prize of $1,250.

And that, as I pointed out to this charming young matron, would buy a lot of dog biscuits.

Today, Jean calls herself a housewife-writer. I started off the interview by asking Mrs. MacKenzie how she managed to mix creative writing with the continuous activity of running a home, and mothering a family. "I don't," she said, "or, rather, I didn't. You see, when my children were quite young, I didn't write at all. But now, when the boys are 15 and 12, they do a lot for themselves."

While not strongly against the Women's Lib. movement, Mrs. MacKenzie feels lukewarm towards it. "I think women as a whole make their best contribution to Canadian life by developing a warm and comfortable atmosphere for their husbands and children in their homes."

Jean elaborated more on this subject as she recalled bits about her early life.

Jean MacKenzie was born somewhere in Saskatchewan, she said. I never did learn just where. Apparently, her birthplace was quite inconsequential to her life, because just after she arrived on the scene, her parents moved west to Vancouver.

"My dad was a freelance writer in Vancouver," remembers Jean. "I grew up with the smell of printer's ink and typewriter ribbons in my nostrils. I walked and ate among reams of galley proofs. At an early age, I learned the symbols of proof reading. In such surroundings, I began to feel that it was both acceptable and possible to become a writer."

"But I did nothing serious about it, until 12 years ago."

On finishing school in 1948, Jean MacKenzie, at 18, shy, artistic, imaginative, took on a variety of short term jobs. The first was as a silk spotter in a dry cleaning plant, then on to store window dressing and showcard writing. She liked the window dressing best.

VICTORIA'S LITERARY PRIZEWINNER DESCRIBES WHAT IT FEELS LIKE TO WIN

... new book ready.

In 1949, a big break came Jean's way. She was offered a job at Bella Bella, a coastal Indian village, north up the B.C. coast where the wide Pacific swells roll across Queen Charlotte Sound and crash against the wild and rocky shore.

It was a summer job. Jean became fascinated by the Indian children she worked among. Bella Bella then was a sizeable village of almost 700 people.

At this point in her story, Jean stopped, and laughed. "I think they must have been hard up for help where I worked, because, at the end of summer I was asked to stay. Gladly, I accepted."

I worked at the United Church Mission Hospital for a year and a half. My position was handy girl. I was a novice cook. I worked as a laundress. I did anything I was asked to do. But I do think that those Indian children suffered a good deal while I learned to cook."

It was during this pleasant, exciting period, that Jean MacKenzie first got the idea for her prize-winning children's book, Storm Island.

"I finally wrote it in 1966," smiled Jean, "after I had acquired a husband and two children."

Jean MacKenzie always knew that she wanted to write, but, until her family grew up, she felt the time was not yet.

Shortly after she was married, Jean went back to work for a while, at her favorite activity — window dressing.

She still remembers a remark her boss made to her one day. "Jake," he said, "you know, dressing a window is just like painting a picture with merchandise."

"How come," I asked in puzzlement, "you had a nickname like Jake?"

"Well," she laughed merrily, "my initials are J — K, so someone just filled them out."

After two years of window dressing, Jean MacKenzie quit to become a mother of a son, followed, three years later, by another son.

To Jean MacKenzie, the most important things in her life, listed in order of importance, are husband, children, home. "Writing is just squeezed in between the edges," she remarked.

"I was very shy when I started writing," she recalled. "It was a big bridge I had to cross myself. I felt that when I wrote anything, I was putting myself on paper for all the world to see. I now have my thinking and my writing under control. Today, before I write anything, I've got it all set up in order, in my head. I can actually write a complete article in three hours. But only because, before I sit down to type, I've done all my editing. You see, a housewife has no time to waste. Why, while I am vacuuming the carpet, I often arrange in my mind exactly what I want to write."

Mrs. MacKenzie's latest book River of Stars, is written around the same area as her prize-winning Storm Island. It deals with Indian children. "I like them," explained Jean. "To understand them, you really have to go to them. They find it much easier to accept a white person if they meet him, or her, on their own ground."

"My new story is about a 15-year-old Indian boy and his fishing adventures on Rivers Inlet, 300 miles north of Vancouver, B.C. It took me seven months to write. Storm Island took me four months. River of Stars should be coming off the press early in November, in time for Canada's National Youth Book Week, Nov. 15-22."

The art of writing juvenile books did not come to Jean MacKenzie by accident.

Always, she has been interested in, and fond of children. She finds their young minds most invigorating. For instance, some time ago, she learned that the children of Braefoot (Cedar Hill) Elementary School had formed the Braefoot Freeland Club, under the direction of their teacher, Mrs. N. Hooper. The aim of the club was to produce a history of the school as a Centennial project.

"I went over and helped with their galley proofs, showing them the variety of symbols which are used by proofreaders. I took along my own galley proofs of my story River of Stars. The youngsters helped to proof read and correct them properly."

"I'm not really in the writing game to make money," Jean continued. "although any that comes along is welcome. I just enjoy the communication with people it brings. I like developing ideas with children. I do believe that I produced Storm Island at a lucky time. It was a tremendous moment for me when I learned that I had won the Centennial Award."

"When the news came through," continued Jean, "my face lit up, my eyes popped, my mouth opened and I almost took off like a rocket."

When I asked Jean if she was planning further books, she nodded, rather sagely, I thought.

"Well, I've got three or four ideas on the line. Oh! sort of just hanging there, you know. I think, perhaps, article writing would be nice. It would fit into my 10-11:30 a.m. schedule, my spare period from housekeeping."

At this point, the boys came home for lunch, so the interview ended.

As I left, I realized one thing. Whichever subjects it is, or when the time, I know that whatever Jean MacKenzie writes, will be — readable.

Canadian Indians Highlighted By Young Canada's Book Week

This year, the theme for Young Canada's Book Week is Indians. "Whether your interests are the legends of old or the social problems of today, read about them this week and talk them over with your friends," advises Heather Harbord, national chairman of Young Canada's Book Week.

"Explore a different part of your public library each time you go there. It has all kinds of exciting books about things you've never even heard of at school," she advises young readers.

The children of 1971 will be the rulers of the 21st century, she observes. Whether they will be masters or slaves of the Brave New World Aldous Huxley so aptly predicted back in 1932, depends largely on their ability to think for themselves. To do this it is not enough to learn the mechanics of reading, they must learn to assess the content too and to discriminate: Which of the popular favorites have something worthwhile to say and which have merely been over-advertised? Even recreational reading can be well written.

She notes today's child has far more wide-ranging interests than his parents had at the same age. Many libraries are recognizing this fact by allowing children to borrow adult books and returning the responsibility for children's reading to the parents where it rightly belongs, especially as different people have different values. This does not mean that the children will abandon the children's section in favor of the adult but rather that they will use both simultaneously, she says.

Patron of this year's Young Canada Book Week, (Nov. 15 to Nov. 22), is Chief Dan George.

"The world of books plays a very important part in the lives of people of all ages, but the ways of teaching and learning among my people are different," he explains.

"Because the Indians of North America in the past had no written language, they had to teach their children verbally. Stories were told and retold to the young people, but most important we believed in learning by example. If the parents were good people, the children followed in their footsteps, living out the spoken words of their fathers."

"Now in an age of written words, it is my hope that someday the native students of North America will write the true story of how the Indians lived centuries ago.

"At present, I am involved in the world of communication, and the reason I love the work that I am doing in films, television and radio is because it gives me an opportunity to try to follow the traditions of my ancestors, thereby setting an example for the Indians of North America."

"The response in the letters I receive from people, both white and Indian, show that my work is having positive results."

"May the Great Spirit love all the people involved in Young Canada's Book Week as long as the grass grows, and the rivers flow."

BOOKS for YOUNG PEOPLE

Little People

POOR STAINLESS, by Mary Norton (Longman Canada, $3.95) is a new story about the Borrowers, the marvelous small-scale people who live chiefly in old houses and out-of-the-way places. In this book, Homily, urged on by her daughter Arriette, tells about a time of crisis in her childhood when a young cousin, Stainless, was lost — and the worst was feared.

How the Borrowers muster their resources and ingenuity — with even the women and children being sent upstairs on the search — to confront an emergency that might easily have ended in tragedy is told with all the warmth, humor and perfectly imagined details of Mary Norton's earlier books about this miniature family that have become modern classics.

Indian Legends

To produce SACRED LEGENDS OF THE SANDY LAKE CREE (McClelland and Stewart, 144 pages, $6.95) a collector of Ojibwa folklore and a talented Cree artist collaborated to create a unique and beautiful volume of legends.

These legends, held sacred by the Sandy Lake Cree Indians, have, due to tribal customs, never been released before — preserved only in the memory of the elder story tellers on the reserve.

Now, with the help of Cree artist Carl Ray, who translated the stories of his tribe and illustrated them, folklore collector James Stevens has brought together many of the most fascinating of the legends and, in his introduction, outlines the history of these people and their way of life.

This volume of Canadians is an exciting adventure into an isolated part of the country where men with "power" still place curses on adversaries; where marriages are usually arranged by parents; and where old ceremonies are held to cure illness and disease. Even though the impact of the 20th century is beginning to be felt on the reserve, the sacred legends of the windigo, thunderbirds and evenging gods, still have their place in Cree belief and are recorded in this book for the first time.

Sacred Legends of the Sandy Lake Cree is not only a book for young readers. Adults will enjoy it just as much as their older youngsters. It is included with this Young Canada's Book Week reading roundup, because it fits so well into theme of this special week — the Canadian Indian.

About Animals

A tame baby porcupine can be picked up without a prick from one of its 30,000 quills. The body temperature of a hibernating ground squirrel can go as low as 39 degrees Fahrenheit. A flying squirrel can execute a banked turn in the air. Would the man who reads your electric meter be frightened to find a timber wolf in your yard? Does tomato juice really dispel the stench of a skunk's protective spray? Could a coyote really catch a bird?

In INTO THE WOODS BEYOND (Macmillan, $5.95) Cy Hampson, a skilled biologist and a superb nature photographer, establishes such facts and answers these and many more questions in recounting his personal involvement with a number of Canadian mammals — some familiar, others less well known.

Each of the eight chapters deals with a single mammal, or a small group, that he has studied at first hand, often for a considerable time.

Through his photographs and descriptions Dr. Hampson brings his animal friends to life. His experiences with each animal are told in a charming and enthusiastic manner that is bound to delight all nature lovers.

Forgetful Cat

A limited vocabulary, linked to gorgeous full color illustrations which form an integral part of the story make MOG, THE FORGETFUL CAT, written and illustrated by Judith Kerr (Collins, $3.95) an ideal book for children learning to read.

Mog was a very forgetful cat that lived with the Thomas family and sometimes her forgetfulness caused the family a great deal of bother.

This delightfully funny story tells in words and pictures how Mog earned the respect of the Thomas family, a medal and the promise of an egg for breakfast every day.

Dragon Laughed Too Much

Kenneth Mahood, the celebrated Punch and New Yorker cartoonist, makes a stunning debut in the field of children's books with THE LAUGHING DRAGON (Collins, $3.95).

His entertaining text is matched by pictures full of blazing colors and hilarious detail.

The trouble with Hojo the dragon was that he laughed too much. Everyone in the Emperor's Palace in Japan enjoyed his cooking and the way he kept the palace warm. But every time he laughed, his hot breath caused injury and damage.

Finally when the Imperial Palace caught fire, Hojo was sadly sent into exile on a barren and fireproof island.

It was George the turtle who came up with the answer. Telling sad stories stopped Hojo laughing. By holding his breath Hojo found to his surprise that he could turn into a hot-air balloon and float back to his beloved Japan, just in time to use Palace, which had been buried this hot breath to save the Imperial under many feet of snow.

He was restored to his proud position of Imperial Pet.

Fun With Paper

In MAKE IT WITH PAPER (Mussion, 247 pages, $7.25) Louise and Orvelo Wood tell how the whole family can have fun making hundreds of objects with paper.

Easy-to-follow directions show how to make paper objects from the simplest paper chains to the intricate art of paper folding. Basic patterns and techniques are provided for masks, mats, mobiles, mosaics, prints, collages, egg carton sculptures and an endless variety of other objects to be made from paper.

Paper That Flies

For more fun with paper Peter Max has written PAPER AIR-PLANE BOOKS (Pyramid, 75 cents), which contains 33 patterns for flying paper planes, which can be cut from the book, folded and flown.

With this book you can launch your own fleet of paper airplanes that fly, in aerodynamic Love colors, each one bearing a message from you as it soars off into the wild blue yonder.

History Tailored to Fit Author's Bias

Reviewed by E. D. WARD-HARRIS

With variations, there are essentially two ways to approach the writing of history: one is to marshal and relate known facts and factors and draw suitable conclusions; the other is to judiciously select material and tailor it to fit a particular bias.

Glen Frankfurter, a Toronto businessman, and lifelong amateur historian, has chosen the latter method to support his contention that Canada is still paying heavily for the past imperialistic actions of Spain, England, France and the United States.

To dramatize his thesis he has titled his book Baneful Domination, a phrase coined in 1834 by Joseph Hume, the British reformer and politician, in a letter to Canada's William Lyon Mackenzie.

The choice of this phrase is interesting because it illustrates Frankfurter's approach. The Concise Oxford Dictionary defines baneful as "cause of ruin" and the reckless use of the phrase in its application to modern Canada becomes evident when it is placed in context.

The relevant passage in Hume's letter read: "Your triumphant election ... will terminate in independence and freedom from the baneful domination of the mother country ... To submit quietly to such domination would be an acknowledgement of servitude ... unworthy of the people of Canada."

It was typical of the radical Hume to us flamboyant language and in this instance it was acceptable because it was music to the ears of the radical Mackenzie. One would have expected Gandhi to have used a similar phrase if he had written to Martin Luther King.

To use this kind of language today to support the thesis that Canada is still a vassal state is a gross perversion of modern Canadian history. Frankfurter is steeped in his subject and writes eloquently and forcefully, which makes his selective history and wild interpretations dangerously misleading.

Sir John A. Macdonald, writes Frankfurter, "was interested in power (isn't power the lure of politics)? There is no evidence that his shrewd political head ever harbored an original political idea.

It is Frankfurter's misfortune that his book should appear at the same moment as The Last Spike, Pierre Berton's thrilling account of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, an account which effectively gives the lie to Sir John A.'s barrenness of ideas and to Frankfurter's main thesis that oppressed Canadians have never been able to act on their own initiative.

The building of the CPR, and other purely Canadian initiatives to unify the nation, are carefully glossed over in this angry book. Frankfurter is almost Marxian in his paranoid approach; if the facts contradict my thinking, ignore them!

A glaring example of this is the inordinate account of space devoted to the financial dealings in the United States of Baring Brothers, the British bankers. First, they are portrayed as exploiting the Americans, then as accomplices of the Americans in exploiting Canada.

In fact, they were not exploiting anybody; they were, like all great financial houses, merely acting in the interests of their own institution.

The proof of this is that Baring's were the bankers who, at the eleventh hour, bought up the bond issue which saved the CPR from certain bankruptcy before the railroad was completed.

This supremely important event in Canadian history rates only a footnote in this biased and vitriolic book.

The concerned publishers are at pains to allay hostility by naively stating that "The entire approach (of this book) may initially lead readers to consider (it) anti-American, but such is not the case."

Who do they think they're fooling? The book is not only blatantly anti-American but also anti-British and strongly anti-royalist, two attitudes that would have infuriated the "oppressed" Canadian, Lord Beaverbrook, who masterminded the appointment of fellow Canadian Bonar Law to the prime ministership of Great Britain.

Frankfurter is undoubtedly a sincere patriot and it would seem that this belief in the idea that Canada is still dominated by "the pale shadow cast by Britain and the ugly shadow darkening the future cast by the United States," is the result of too many years spent looking in dark closets for evidence to support his obsession.

IN PICTURES and TEXT

Eskimo Woman Tells Life Story

Two copies of a new book by a 70-year-old Eskimo woman were presented to the National Library in Ottawa on Oct. 4 by Jean Chretien, minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The author attended the presentation ceremony.

The book, Pitseolak: Pictures Out of My Life, is the autobiography of Pitseolak, an artist whose work also illustrates the publication. English and Eskimo syllabics printed side-by-side tell the Eskimo woman's life-story.

Pitseolak is a resident of Cape Dorset on Baffin Island who has "lost the time when I was born ... my sons say maybe I am 70." A talented artist, she has produced a variety of engravings, stone cuts, and drawings in color and black and white, more than 90 of which illustrate the book brought out Sept. 30 by Design Collaborative Montreal Limited in association with Oxford University Press of Toronto.

In her autobiography, Pitseolak recounts her childhood, life in the old Eskimo way, and the changes brought with the arrival of strangers from the south. She also describes games she played while young, the fearsome powers of the Eskimo shamans, old hunting trips, and the coming of James Houston, the first civil administrator for Cape Dorset, who asked her and others to draw pictures, and to produce other art depicting their lifestyle and environment.

Pitseolak is very aware of the significance of the period in which she has lived for her people. In her words: "I know I have had an unusual life, being born in a skin tent and living to hear on the radio that two men have landed on the moon. I think the new times started for Eskimos after the white men's war, when the white men began to make many houses in the Arctic."

The artist was interviewed and tape-recorded in Cape Dorset by Dorothy Harley Eber, with the help of interpreters, and the tapes were edited by Mrs. Eber into a narrative that tells Pitseolak's life story. The Eskimo text was prepared with the assistance of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, in particular with the aid of Sarah Ekoomiak and Harriet Ruston, two Eskimo girls who work for the department in Ottawa.

Commenting on the publication of the book, Mr. Chretien said: "I am most pleased this book has been added to the growing number of works by Eskimo and Indian authors. Last year we witnessed the publishing of Harpoon of the Hunter by another Eskimo, Markosie, a talented young man who is also an airline pilot. Now we have a book of memoirs and wonderful artwork by Pitseolak, a lady who has preserved for us in a vivid fashion times back to the turn of the century when the Eskimo people were much less affected by the white man's society.

"Both authors have made outstanding contributions to the cultural heritage of the native people and to all Canadians. It is indeed interesting for all of us to find out about 'the old way.'"

Pitseolak—her name means "sea pigeon"—was born on Nottingham Island in Hudson's Bay. In the year she was born her family left their camp at Sugluk in what is now Nouveau-Quebec to set out for Baffin Island. They travelled to the Foxe Peninsula and then went on to Frobiisher Bay.

Early travels of her family were made in sealskin boats, but she recalls the time when her father decided to buy a wooden boat in Lake Harbor, Baffin Island. On that occasion, the little Pitseolak burst into tears with fright when she saw her first white man.

When she was still young, Pitseolak married her childhood friend Ashoon and was the mother of 17 children, four of whom survive today. The family lived in igloos and summer tent-huts called "kaamuk" while on hunting trips in the region. Her husband, who had a reputation as a fine hunter, died while the family was on one of these hunting and fishing trips.

In the 1950s, James Houston came to Cape Dorset where Pitseolak had settled, and asked her to draw the old ways. She included the old costumes and the spirits and monsters of the Eskimo traditions in her works. She says now that making prints has helped to make her happy again since the death of her husband, and she intends to keep on producing them.

REVIEWS in BRIEF

THE NAVAL WAR AGAINST HITLER, by Donald MacIntyre (Copp Clark; 376 pages; $15.50) is one of the most complete and authoritative accounts of the war at sea in the Atlantic, Mediterranean, and Baltic theatres.

Captain MacIntyre, now a naval historian with the British Ministry of Defence, has made good use of German and Italian sources to provide a clear analysis of the strategic issues on either side and of the interaction on these three main theatres of conflict.

This book, with its many maps, diagrams and photographs, incorporates and forms the climax to much of MacIntyre's earlier work on the Second World War. His style remains ponderous ("We shall turn, therefore, to follow the course of the Battle Of The Atlantic which ...") but the substance of the book makes it a valuable addition to naval literature.

THE LAW OF DIVORCE IN CANADA, by Irving D. Temins, QC (Primrose Publishing Company, 60 Yonge Street, Toronto; paperback $2.50) lists the main grounds for divorce in the form of questions and answers. There is a heavy emphasis on Ontario, but in general the advice applies to most Canadian provinces under the Divorce Act of Canada, which is given fully in an appendix.

Most people anxious to terminate their marriage will consult a lawyer, but many do not do so because they are ignorant of the many factors other than adultery that serve as grounds for divorce. This book was obviously designed to help such people.

Both Sides of Astrology

Reviewed by BARBARA McLINTOCK

Realistic is not a word one would expect to turn up in the title of a non-fiction book. One normally thinks it goes without saying that such books are realistic and based on fact.

But realistic is the key word in the title of Gary Jennings' latest book, and it is the realism and objectivity of The Teen-Ager's Realistic Guide to Astrology that makes it so much better than most books on the subject.

Jennings claims that 99 per cent of the books published are "written to glorify astrology and to convert more people to a belief in it, so they carefully leave out any mention of astrology's shortcomings." Luckily, he has not fallen into this trap, and in the book, he has obviously taken great care to give the reader both sides of the story.

His aim, he says, is to let each reader decide for himself whether astrology is "an entertaining hobby or an amusing form of parlor-game fortune-telling" or whether it is something to be taken seriously.

He gives plenty of information for the reader to do so, all of it based on the most modern astrological principles. The simple sun signs are dealt with in some detail, and he undertakes to correct some of the commoner misconceptions surrounding them. As well, he discusses moon signs, ascendant signs and planetary charts.

He shows how to make up a natal chart for a person and how to interpret a horoscope from it. He also discusses to foretell the future astrologically, and gives some preparation for those who wish to venture into more advanced astrology by mentioning tables of houses and ephemerides.

In all these matters the book is far more detailed and accurate than most, and for that reason alone, it is worth buying for the student of astrology.

But its outstanding feature is the chapters devoted to the history of astrology, astrological predictions and Does Astrology Work? These are full of fascinating historical detail about uses of astrology and predictions. Jennings discusses astrology in terms of modern astronomy and mathematical probability.

By offering a really balanced picture of its accomplishments and failures, he shows astrology to be neither the ridiculous jest it is sometimes considered, nor the all-powerful influence its devotees think it to be.

This makes it one of the best books on the market for those with a beginning interest in the subject — or for those with a little knowledge who would like to learn more.

Photo-Essay About Victoria Ideal for Overseas Friends

Only in Victoria would one find a new book containing the old-fashioned colophon—a tail-piece providing information usually found on the title-page.

The colophon to Victoria informs us, among other things, that the publication, design and printing of the book was undertaken by Morriss Printing Company Ltd., Victoria, and that the first edition is limited to 1,000 copies.

There is no doubt at all that the production of this photo-essay on B.C.'s capital city was a labor of love; printing, design and binding cannot be faulted, and there are no typographical errors or misplaced captions.

There is also no doubt that a reprinting will be required for this book answers the need of those who are always looking for something of the kind to send to friends and relatives overseas.

It would be nice to be able to say that all the contents match the quality of production. Unfortunately, this is not so.

The introduction, in the form of a capsule history of Victoria, was written by George Woodcock, versatile writer, distinguished editor of Canadian Literature, and a professor of English at the University of British Columbia.

Woodcock has compressed his material into 14 pages with wide margins and large type-face and it's astonishing how much ground he has covered and how much comment he has managed to insert among the facts.

His eloquence and humor provide a welcome change from the turgid prose of so many books and articles about Victoria. A criticism is the avoidance of mention of gardens (except in captions) and outdoor recreational activities and the emphasis he places on "an excellent art gallery, a symphony orchestra, a professional theatre, and a literary journal of international distinction, The Malahat Review."

To anyone overseas this misplaced emphasis could lead to a false impression of our city.

The most serious fault with this book, however, is that George Wood-

Moody Steelhead Photos Tell Their Own Story

... with an assist from Rod Haig-Brown text

Come Wade the River is a magnificent picture book that will be treasured in the libraries of all steelheaders.

Ralph Wahl of Bellingham has taken a selection of his spectacular pictures of fly fishing for steelhead in a variety of west coast rivers and wrapped them around month-by-month excerpts from Roderick Haig-Brown's A River Never Sleeps.

Haig-Brown's almost poetic words, combined with Wahl's beautiful photographs, most of them run full page-size, cannot help but build the thrill of anticipation in the reader who is already an active steelheader, or the feeling of nostalgia in the steelheader whose active days are past. Even those who have never enjoyed the thrill of steelhead on line will thrill to this book.

Campbell River's Roderick Haig-Brown needs no introduction to Islander readers. His books are well known and well-loved on Vancouver Island.

The Colonist and this reviewer have participated in many of his conservation battles.

Ralph Wahl, who until his retirement operated Wahl's department store in Bellingham, is an expert photographer as his book attests, particularly so on his favorite subject — fly fishing for steelhead. His pictures have appeared in Sports Illustrated, Outdoor Life, Field and Stream, Life and Time.

He has fished and photographed rivers all the way up the west coast from the Eel River in California to the Babine River in British Columbia and his 20.8-pound steelhead holds the Washington record for steelhead caught on the fly.

cock has been afforded so little space. Hopefully, he may one day be persuaded to expand his delightful mini-essay into a full-scale book.

The longing for more by George Woodcock is chiefly due to the inferior standard of the remaining material, photographs by Ingeborg Woodcock, which are in fact the reason for the book.

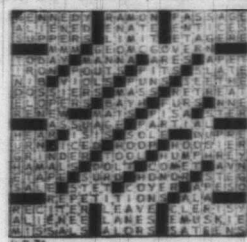

This lady's work is mediocre — flat, lacking highlights, shadows, movement and, worst of all, inspiration. All photographs are black and white, which is understandable as color would have made the book prohibitively expensive. But with imagination and talent black and white pictures can be made exciting.

The "blich" views of The Butchart Gardens, close-ups of flowers and similar subjects, give no indication of their actual beauty. And some shots — two horses in a field, a deer behind a wire fence, ordinary country views, and a meaningless view of Prospect Lake Park — could have been taken in any one of a dozen countries.

There is practically nothing to indicate that Victoria is a tourist centre, and nothing at all on our excellent golf courses, to cite only one omission.

The photographs are better than nothing, I suppose, but this beautifully produced book was worthy of a better talent. — E. D. W. H.

ANSWER TO LAST WEEK'S PUZZLE

Sunday, November 14, 1971

By ERIC BURGOYNE

In these days when choice Vancouver Island property is being snapped up by rich, peace-seeking Americans and ever-increasing numbers of new residents from other parts of Canada, it doesn't seem sensible to leave one of the Island's finest freshwater lake parks unguarded.

And it has remained unguarded by city councils of Victoria from 1925 right to this day.

According to Victoria archivist Ainslie Helmcken, the city expropriated the Esquimalt Water Works Co., which was having financial troubles, and in so doing, acquired Thetis Lake. (Goldstream Park was included in the deal, the waters being used as Esquimalt reservoirs, but Goldstream was taken over by the province.)

The Victoria Water Works Act of 1873 provides tax exemption for any land held by the city for water works purposes, and this also applies to Thetis Lake.

In addition to the above information, provincial archivist Willard Ireland agrees that expropriation took place in 1925, on Aug. 4, and that the city fathers finally opened the park to public swimming in 1932.

Despite the fact that the records from both

THETIS LAKE . . . Victoria playground in danger.

Unguarded Thetis Lake Faces People Pollution

CITY COUNCIL APATHY MAJOR THREAT

the provincial and city archives show the Esquimalt Water Works Co. and its holdings were expropriated, city hall officials, even in the comptroller's department, remain hazy as to the worth of the land in those days, how much the city paid for it, and some have even denied the expropriation.

With the confusion that apparently exists at city hall regarding Thetis Lake Park, it's small wonder that in actual, legal terms, this 1,100-acre, first-class recreation area is still not a park, of which citizens can be sure.

Because Victoria city councils, including the present one, lacked the foresight to dedicate this land as a park in perpetuity, conceivably it could be up for grabs by any eager land developer.

In effect, what this means, observers say, any future council should it so desire, can sell the property to the highest bidder because it has not been dedicated . . . protected for the public as a park.

Already there is talk of selling the 40 acres of the park which are on the south side of the Trans-Canada Highway.

Recently the present Victoria city council tried to sell Thetis Lake Park to the Capital Regional Board, but the price of $100,000 was too rich for the board's blood.

Council then voted once more on whether to dedicate it as a park. This move failed when Ald. Percy Frampton convinced councilmen the city should keep its options open.

According to Frampton, dedicating the Thetis land would render it commercial valueless and make a later sale impossible.

Parks chairman Ald. Clyde Savage introduced a motion to dedicate at council's Sept. 23 session, but received no support.

Frampton, according to The Daily Colonist report of that meeting, said: "We need the money," (from the sale of the park to the Capital Region).

So the options were kept open. This council or a future one theoretically, can deprive Victorians of one of the finest swimming, camping, picnic grounds they can possibly enjoy so close to the city.

The 1971 council agreed to spend $31,000 to improve sanitation and other facilities at Thetis this coming year, but that remains the only progressive step taken regarding the park in many years.

There was one other move, a year earlier. The installation of a ticket dispensing machine in an effort to get Victorians to pay for parking. It costs the city $25,000 a year to maintain the park, and this would help defray costs.

But when it comes to protecting the park for the future, things get cloudy.

City hall observers say that Frampton has never spelled out his reasons for objecting to dedication, but it is reported that he has said that he was not in favor of dedicating the 40 acres on the south side of the highway, and it is understood city hall feels this parcel would be a handsome bargaining tool.

Another danger besides council inaction threatens this beautiful island park.

Even here, in ideal surroundings, pollution has reared its fangs.

The Thetis Park Nature Sanctuary Association in October called for support to save Thetis from pollution and to preserve the lake's natural beauty.

President Harold Mathews' appeal follows an intensive study by a team of experts on the effects of a 500-acre subdivision proposed for the lake's watershed, adjacent to the park's west boundary.

Entrance to the proposed development would be made off Phelps Road. It is not part of the Thetis Park land, but is adjacent to it.

The report, submitted to the Capital Regional Board and the city of Victoria, urges that the Region immediately purchase the lake's drainage area, about 245 acres on the western boundary of the second lake.

Mathews said the purchase is urgent as the Region has approved a Thetis Lake Park Estates plan for subdividing the property into 10-acre lots.

He warned that present plans call for some homes to be within 100 yards from the lakeshore.

Apart from destroying the natural beauty, he said, the subdivision would lead to "people pollution."

"It would only be a matter of time until the owners of the lots would be permitted to subdivide their 10-acre holdings into one acre or half-acre lots," he warned.

It is understood that the developing syndicate of the proposed estates are already planning to advertise in Seattle by spring.

Coupled with the warning from Mathews that developers are already beginning to circle the park;

And a warning by Ald. Clyde Savage that a Victoria city council of "wide awake young men eager for the buck," could sell Thetis Lake Park if they wanted;

It appears that park lovers have very little time left in which to become organized to fight the greed of developers and apathy of council after council.
